Adjoa Aiyetoro

In December, Associate Professor Adjoa Aiyetoro participated on a committee organized by the attorneys representing the Scott Sisters in Mississippi and assisted in drafting a complaint concerning the state’s failure to provide adequate medical treatment for Jamie Scott. The Mississippi governor’s suspension of the sisters’ sentences eliminated the need for the lawsuit.

In January, Aiyetoro participated on a panel at St. Louis University School of Law discussing reparations and its relationship to civil and human rights. The Black Law Students Association organized the panel. The audience included faculty from several departments of the university, students and community people.

Lynn Foster

Arkansas Bar Foundation Professor of Law Lynn Foster was a panelist for the Probate Track at the Arkansas Bar Association Midyear Meeting in Memphis on Jan. 28. The topics addressed were the ethics of estate planning and institutions versus family members as trustees.

Philip Oliver

The third edition of Byron M. Eiseman Distinguished Professor of Tax Law Philip Oliver’s book, Readings and Materials on Tax Policy, was recently published.

Kelly Browe Olson

Associate Professor Kelly Browe Olson participated in several recent panels, including:

- “Effective Advocacy in Mediation: How Attorneys and other Participants Help or Hinder the Mediation Process,” Panel Moderator and Presenter, 18th Annual CHILDREN’S LAW INSTITUTE, Jan. 13, Albuquerque, N.M.
- “Connecting Doctrinal and Practical Problem-Solving Instruction to Enhance Legal Education,” Panel Moderator and Presenter, ADR Section Session at AALS Annual Meeting, Jan. 7, San Francisco

Josh Silverstein

On Jan. 24, Associate Professor Josh Silverstein served as a commenter for Professor Kurt Lash’s presentation, “Constitutional Federalism: The Lost History of the 9th and 10th Amendments.” The event was sponsored by the UALR chapter of The Federalist Society.