Historical Note

America's railways grew quickly in the post-Civil War era. Many, like Arkansas' Cairo and Fulton railway, were chartered before the Civil War, but their construction was interrupted. Between 1871 and 1917, the Cairo and Fulton Railroad was variously reorganized, acquired, and consolidated at least six times, becoming part of railroad magnate Jay Gould's St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern Railway in 1906, which was in turn absorbed by Missouri Pacific in 1917. Because of the rapid rate of railroad consolidation, the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC) was formed in 1887 to regulate this new technology. The Valuation Act of 1913 required the ICC to form the Bureau of Valuation to assess the value of railroad property, so the ICC compelled railroads to create and submit maps of their holdings to the Bureau of Valuation.

Scope and Contents

This collection contains 293 large valuation maps of the Cairo and Fulton Railroad, and other connected railways in the American Mid-South region which were acquired by the Missouri Pacific Railroad Company. This includes the Kansas City Northwestern Railroad, (and therefore Kansas City and Topeka, Kansas) as well as the St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern Railway, which includes parts of Missouri.

These maps, which were published in 1918, each cover a small area (scale is typically 1 inch = 200 feet) of track - a few in areas so remote as to not even have a name associated with it. The maps were meant to assess the value of the railroad, so they primarily show the railroad's right-of-way and tracks, which may be straightforward in a rural stretch or detailed and complex in a railyard such as Kansas City or North Little Rock.
