

THE RIGHT OF PRIVACY IN ARKANSAS: A PROGRESSIVE STATE

*J. Lyn Entrikin

“Arkansas has a rich and compelling tradition of protecting individual privacy. . . . [A] fundamental right to privacy is implicit in the Arkansas Constitution.”¹

I. INTRODUCTION

Summarizing Arkansas privacy law just two decades ago, Professor John Watkins observed that caller ID services, electronic eavesdropping devices, and CD-ROM files of computerized personal information all posed significant risks to Arkansans’ privacy interests.² Twenty years later, a proliferation of technological advances enables invasions of privacy by various means, including data mining, social media, internet search engines, spyware, and online identity theft.³ The stakes have never been higher for state laws protecting the civil right of privacy.

Today, privacy law in the United States amounts to an increasingly complex patchwork of state and federal provisions.⁴ With respect to informational privacy, United States law is an example of the sectoral approach to regulation, which layers discrete state and federal constitutional and statutory privacy protections over a backdrop of state common law rules largely drawn from the Restatement (Second) of Torts.⁵ A sectoral approach to informational privacy rights regulates a narrow range of privacy interests, as opposed to an “omnibus” law, which offers general standards that govern when no sectoral law unambiguously applies.⁶ On the other hand, autonomous privacy, the right to make decisions free from governmental interference regarding one’s intimate and family relationships, is protected to a greater or lesser extent by federal and state constitutions as interpreted by the courts.

Constitutional privacy jurisprudence reflects the substantial change in social norms relating to privacy interests over the last twenty years.⁷ To a limited extent, federal constitutional law acknowledges a substantive right of autonomous privacy, not only with respect to parenting⁸ and reproductive decisions,⁹ but also conduct within non-marital, consensual sexual relationships.¹⁰ Numerous federal and state statutes recognize sectoral privacy rights,¹¹ including the extensive privacy protection of personal health information guaranteed by the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996 (HIPAA).¹² At the same time, state and federal Freedom of Information Acts allow broad public access to government information.¹³ Yet even those statutes offer important exceptions that recognize the need to balance the right of public access against the privacy rights of government officials and Arkansas residents whose personal information may be at risk of disclosure in public records.¹⁴

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

Both state and federal courts have recognized a right of privacy with respect to private consensual adult relationships.¹⁵ But these implied privacy rights clash with statutory and state constitutional provisions that restrict who may marry. For example, Congress enacted the Defense of Marriage Act in 1996.¹⁶ One section of the Act, generally known as DOMA, defines “marriage” for purposes of federal law to mean only “a legal union between one man and one woman as husband and wife.”¹⁷ Further, DOMA expressly authorizes states to disregard same-sex relationships legally recognized as marriages by other states, as well as any rights or claims arising from those same-sex relationships.¹⁸ The United States Supreme Court recently held that by defining “marriage” for purposes of federal law to exclude same-sex marriages presently recognized under the laws of eleven states and the District of Columbia, section 3 of DOMA violates the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment.¹⁹ While the Court deferred to the States to decide in the first instance whether same-sex marriages are valid, the Court’s decision will no doubt lead the Arkansas Supreme Court to revisit the dimensions of the state constitutional right of privacy.

In 2002, the Arkansas Supreme Court joined a small group of other state supreme courts that have interpreted their respective state constitutions to provide a civil right of privacy against government intrusion,²⁰ independent of any interstitial right of privacy implied in the United States Constitution.²¹ Relying on the state’s fundamental right of privacy, the court held that the Arkansas constitutional right “protects all private, consensual, non-commercial acts of sexual intimacy between adults.”²² In 2011, the Arkansas Supreme Court cited the state constitutional right of familial privacy²³ in striking down a statute, enacted by initiative in 2008,²⁴ that would have barred individuals from adopting or serving as foster parents if living with a sexual partner outside a marriage relationship recognized as valid under Arkansas law.²⁵ Yet the court has not decided whether the privacy protections recognized as implicit in the Arkansas Constitution extend to informational privacy.

This Article outlines Arkansas’s civil right of privacy as it stands in 2013. Compared to the civil and constitutional privacy protections of many other states, Arkansas’s privacy law for the most part is quite progressive.²⁶ But while the Arkansas Supreme Court has broadly interpreted the state constitution to grant a fundamental right of privacy to Arkansans, the constitutional right protects against intrusions only by government agencies and officials. Over the last two decades, the Arkansas General Assembly has enacted a number of sectoral statutes that sanction privacy invasions by specific means such as spyware and phishing.²⁷ But the enforcement of criminal privacy statutes largely depends upon the discretion of state and local prosecutors. These statutory efforts to protect privacy, however well meaning, are unlikely to have much effect because of limited government resources and the political priorities of elected prosecutors.

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

For all of these reasons, Arkansas common law, which offers civil remedies against privacy invasions by non-governmental entities, remains an important source of privacy protection. As this Article will explain, state common law privacy rights have evolved substantially since 1962 when the Arkansas Supreme Court first implicitly recognized a cause of action for invasion of privacy by misappropriation of one's likeness.²⁸ Yet several issues remain unresolved, including the scope of the privacy protection the court has found implicit in the Arkansas Constitution.

This Article synthesizes legal authority defining the Arkansas civil right of privacy and identifies issues yet to be resolved. Part I provides a brief overview of the fascinating history of privacy law in the United States.²⁹ Part II addresses the evolution of the common law right of privacy in Arkansas beginning as early as 1909, as well as the state constitutional right of privacy first acknowledged in Jegley v. Picado.³⁰ Part III details the elements of each of the four iterations of the Arkansas common law right of privacy as interpreted by state and federal courts. Part IV identifies issues related to the Arkansas right of privacy that the courts have not yet fully resolved, including the extent to which Arkansas law recognizes a private cause of action for invasion of privacy as an alternative means of enforcing criminal statutes implicating privacy interests. Part V concludes.

II. THE HISTORICAL DEVELOPMENT OF THE COMMON LAW RIGHT OF PRIVACY IN THE UNITED STATES

Not often does a law review article lead the way for United States courts to recognize a novel legal right that was unrecognized at common law.³¹ The earliest cases debating the existence of the personal right of privacy were a direct outgrowth of an 1890 article co-authored by two law partners and published in the law review of their alma mater.³² The trigger for the article was the proliferation of news media commentary on the social events of the day, facilitated by invasive new technologies.³³

By the close of the nineteenth century, photography had become ubiquitous in the United States.³⁴ George Eastman patented the Kodak box camera on September 4, 1888, making photography accessible to the general public.³⁵ The portable Kodak camera enabled surreptitious photography,³⁶ triggering legal actions for violating "the right of circulating portraits."³⁷

In 1890, Samuel D. Warren and his former law partner, future Supreme Court Justice Louis D. Brandeis, co-authored an article calling for a new cause of action for invasion of privacy.³⁸ The motivation for the article may have been "a series of

nal version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

articles in a Boston high-society gossip magazine, describing Warren's swanky dinner parties.³⁹ In the age of "yellow journalism," the co-authors famously observed, "[T]he protection afforded to thoughts, sentiments, and emotions, expressed through the medium of writing or of the arts, so far as it consists in preventing publication, is merely an instance of the enforcement of the more general right of the individual to be let alone."⁴⁰

During the next decade, New York trial courts issued a series of decisions enjoining defendants from publishing photographs of individuals without their consent.⁴¹ But in 1902, in Roberson v. Rochester Folding Box,⁴² a deeply divided New York Court of Appeals reversed a judgment awarding money damages to Abigail Roberson, an eighteen-year-old whose photograph had been displayed without her consent on 25,000 advertising posters for baking flour.⁴⁴ The court's refusal to recognize a cause of action drew criticism from across the country.⁴⁵ In response to the public outcry, the 1903 New York Legislature hastily enacted a statutory right to privacy, narrowly framed to provide a civil remedy for those whose names or likenesses have been appropriated for trade or advertising purposes without their written consent.⁴⁶

Like New York, other state appellate courts declined to recognize a common law right to privacy, instead deferring the issue to their respective state legislatures.⁴⁷ A few states followed suit, enacting legislation similar to New York's.⁴⁸ But several other states, by judicial declaration, recognized a more sweeping right to privacy.

The first to do so was Georgia. In Pavesich v. New England Life Insurance Co.,⁴⁹ the Georgia Supreme Court held that a plaintiff had stated a claim against an insurance company for printing his photograph in a newspaper advertisement without his consent.⁵⁰ In recognizing a civil remedy for invasion of privacy, the court drew from natural law principles, state and federal constitutional protection of individual liberty interests, and a Georgia statute authorizing any court to "'frame'" a remedy, if necessary, for a violation of any right within its jurisdiction.⁵¹ In the end, the Georgia Supreme Court boldly (and accurately) predicted that one day the right of privacy would be generally recognized in the United States:

So thoroughly satisfied are we that the law recognizes, within proper limits . . . the right of privacy, and that the publication of one's picture without his consent by another as an advertisement, for the mere purpose of increasing the profits and gains of the advertiser, is an invasion of this right, that we venture to predict that the day will come that the American bar will marvel that a contrary view was ever entertained by judges of eminence and ability . . .⁵²

After Pavesich, other state and federal courts adopted varied perspectives on the question.⁵³ The Rhode Island Supreme Court, following the New York Court of Appeals, rejected the common law right of privacy in

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

1909, noting it was “unable to discover the existence of the right of privacy contended for.”⁵⁴ That same year, the Arkansas Supreme Court first acknowledged⁵⁵ but then narrowly sidestepped the issue in an action challenging the use of photographs of two criminal detainees in a “rogues’ gallery.”⁵⁶ On the merits, the court declared that law enforcement officers’ use of detainees’ photographs solely for identification purposes was not improper.⁵⁷ Thus, it declined to address whether Arkansas would recognize a common law right of privacy in other contexts.

In 1911, the Missouri Court of Appeals, relying on Pavesich, recognized a five-year-old boy’s common law cause of action against a Kansas City jewelry store for using his image in a newspaper advertisement without consent.⁵⁸ Just a year later, a federal district court, also in Missouri, pointedly declined to resolve “the irreconcilable conflict of opinions and views of courts of last resort in various jurisdictions.”⁵⁹ The court posited that even if a right of privacy did exist, it would surely not extend to a public educational institution seeking to enjoin a biscuit company from using the college’s name and emblems for commercial purposes.⁶⁰ Thus, Vassar College was denied an injunction prohibiting the marketing of “Vassar Chocolates” in packaging that displayed knock-offs of the college seal, pennant, and motto.⁶¹

In 1939, the American Law Institute (ALI) recognized the evolving common law right of privacy in the first version of the Restatement of Torts.⁶² The Restatement outlined a single common law cause of action for invasion of privacy based on two alternatives: first, disclosing another person’s private affairs to others; and second, exhibiting another’s likeness to the public.⁶³ To recover, a plaintiff was required to establish not only that the invasion was an unreasonable and serious interference with the plaintiff’s privacy interests, but also that the defendant should have foreseen that the plaintiff would justifiably feel “seriously hurt” by the challenged conduct.⁶⁴ Having met these requirements, the plaintiff was not required to prove either physical harm or pecuniary loss to recover damages.⁶⁵

Almost from the beginning, state courts citing the Restatement provision recognized privacy invasions that went beyond the essential elements outlined by the ALI. For example, in 1941 the Oregon Supreme Court recognized an invasion of privacy when an optical corporation, without consent, signed the plaintiff’s name to a telegram urging the Governor to veto a bill that would have prohibited corporations from dispensing optical glasses.⁶⁶ While the facts involved neither disclosure of the plaintiff’s private affairs to the public nor the exhibition of the plaintiff’s likeness, the court nevertheless recognized a right of privacy that was invaded when the defendant “appropriated . . . for [its] own purposes . . . [plaintiff’s] name, his personality, and whatever [political] influence he may have possessed.”⁶⁷

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

In 1960, Dean William Prosser published an influential law review article acknowledging four related but distinct aspects of the common law right of privacy.⁶⁸ Prosser's proposed formulation included (1) intrusion on seclusion, solitude, or private affairs; (2) public disclosure of embarrassing private facts; (3) publicity casting plaintiff in a false light in the public eye; and (4) appropriation of name or likeness for the defendant's advantage.⁶⁹ Each of the four privacy torts protects related but distinct privacy interests.⁷⁰

Soon after publication of Dean Prosser's article, the Arkansas Supreme Court acknowledged a narrow common law right of privacy for the first time when a photography corporation used the plaintiff's studio photographs for advertising purposes without her consent.⁷¹ Citing Prosser's seminal article at the end of a footnote along with several other secondary authorities addressing the right of privacy, the court implicitly recognized the tort he had classified as appropriation of likeness for the defendant's advantage.⁷²

Fifteen years after the Arkansas Supreme Court acknowledged the common law right of privacy in Olan Mills, Inc. of Texas v. Dodd,⁷³ the ALI adopted Dean Prosser's formulation of the four privacy torts in the Restatement (Second) of Torts.⁷⁴ Since then, the great majority of states, including Arkansas,⁷⁵ have adopted all or most of the four distinct causes of action outlined by Dean Prosser in 1960.⁷⁶

III. EVOLUTION OF THE ARKANSAS RIGHT OF PRIVACY

Although the point is seldom emphasized in the cases, each variation of the common law right of privacy recognized in Arkansas is an intentional tort.⁷⁷ Because intent is an essential element of the claim, the plaintiff must prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant acted intentionally. To establish intent, Arkansas law requires more than proof that the defendant intended to do the act that in turn caused the harm.⁷⁸ The plaintiff must show that the defendant believed the tortious results were substantially certain to follow from defendant's conduct.⁷⁹ In other words, the tortious harm not only must have been reasonably foreseeable to the defendant; the injury also must have been subjectively foreseen by the defendant to support liability.

Moreover, a plaintiff who files a privacy claim in state court must satisfy Arkansas pleading requirements to withstand a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. Arkansas is a fact pleading state and does not recognize notice pleading.⁸⁰ In alleging violation of the right of privacy, a claimant must, at minimum, specifically identify the nature of the privacy claim asserted.⁸¹

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

A. Common Law Right of Privacy

While the Arkansas Supreme Court gave an approving nod to the development of the common law right of privacy in other states as early as 1909,⁸² it was a relative latecomer in fully recognizing the cause of action grounded in Arkansas common law. In 1957, in Webber v. Gray,⁸³ the Arkansas Supreme Court upheld an injunction against a jilted paramour who had repeatedly harassed the plaintiff over several years.⁸⁴ While the allegations might have supported a common law cause of action for what is now commonly known as intrusion on seclusion,⁸⁵ the complaint sounded in equity and failed to raise the right of privacy as the basis for a common law claim.⁸⁶ While sitting in equity, the court's reasoning was nevertheless consistent with the policies underlying recognition of the common law right of privacy.⁸⁷

In Olan Mills, Inc. of Texas v. Dodd, the Arkansas Supreme Court upheld a jury verdict awarding damages to a woman whose photograph had been used without her consent to advertise the defendant's photography studio.⁸⁸ The only dispute on appeal was whether the court would sustain the award of damages for emotional distress alone in the absence of physical injury.⁸⁹ The court did not address the privacy claim on its merits because the defendant conceded that the plaintiff had established the elements of invasion of privacy; the only issue in dispute was the amount of damages awarded.⁹⁰ Nevertheless, Olan Mills has been cited repeatedly by the Arkansas appellate courts as the first case in which the common law right of privacy was recognized.

Not until 1979 did the court explicitly adopt the four common law privacy actions as defined in the Restatement (Second) of Torts. In Dodrill v. Arkansas Democrat Co.,⁹¹ the court upheld summary judgment granted to the news publisher in a case filed by an attorney plaintiff for defamation and invasion of privacy.⁹² In a previous action, the attorney had been suspended from the practice of law, subject to readmission if he successfully sat for the Arkansas bar exam.⁹³ After retaking the exam and passing it, he alleged that the defendant newspaper erroneously reported that he had failed the exam.⁹⁴ Before affirming summary judgment on the merits, the Arkansas Supreme Court expressly adopted the four privacy torts as "codified" in the Restatement.⁹⁵

Since 1979, the Arkansas courts have repeatedly acknowledged the four common law privacy torts as defined in the Restatement.⁹⁶ After Olan Mills, no cases involving appropriation of name or likeness have reached the Arkansas appellate courts. Intrusion on seclusion and false light publicity appear to be the privacy torts most often litigated in Arkansas appellate courts.⁹⁷ While the state courts have not addressed a claim for publicity given to private facts, the federal courts have done so on occasion.⁹⁸ Part III addresses each of the four privacy torts in more detail.

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

B. Constitutional Right of Privacy

The underpinnings of the Arkansas Constitution's right of privacy were recognized by the Arkansas Supreme Court as early as 1924 in Coker v. City of Fort Smith.⁹⁹ A city ordinance prohibiting prostitution also prohibited any male over the age of fourteen from accompanying, day or night, “without there being any necessity therefor . . . any woman known or generally reputed to be a prostitute or lewd woman.”¹⁰⁰ Coker was convicted of a misdemeanor and fined for violating the statute, and he appealed, challenging its constitutionality.¹⁰¹ The Arkansas Supreme Court held that the ordinance went too far by effectively denying a prostitute the value of residing in the city by denying the privileges that “give that right its value.”¹⁰² While the ordinance did not directly prohibit a prostitute from accompanying a male in the city, it effectively denied her that right by criminalizing the conduct of her male companion.¹⁰³

Coker did not expressly rely on the Arkansas Constitution as the basis for invalidating the Fort Smith ordinance. The court simply held that the relevant portion of the ordinance was “too broad in its terms, and was beyond the power of the [city] council to enact, and [was] therefore invalid.”¹⁰⁴ The court reasoned, however, that the ordinance limited the liberty interests of “lewd” women as well as their male companions,¹⁰⁵ directly implicating what would later become known as the “right to be let alone.” Further, the court cited two cases from Texas and Missouri, each of which had struck down similar enactments on state and federal constitutional grounds.¹⁰⁶

In 1973 in Carter v. State,¹⁰⁷ the Arkansas Supreme Court addressed the constitutional privacy issue more directly. The appellants challenged the constitutionality of the Arkansas criminal sodomy statute¹⁰⁸ on multiple grounds. They had been convicted for engaging in intimate conduct in a vehicle parked at a public rest stop and tourist information facility, within view of others who had parked trucks, automobiles, and campers there.¹⁰⁹ The appellants' main argument was that the statute violated their right of privacy under various amendments to the United States Constitution.¹¹⁰

The Arkansas Supreme Court refused to strike down the statute, observing that it carried a strong presumption of constitutionality.¹¹¹ Moreover, the presumption of validity was “enhanced by the highly persuasive fact that the [criminal sodomy] statute was long unassailed.”¹¹² The court emphasized that the defendants' conduct leading to the conviction occurred not in private, but in a public place.¹¹³ The appellants unsuccessfully cited cases that “demonstrate[d] . . . the expansion of the ‘right to privacy in matters of intimate personal preference’ . . . based upon the courts' having taken cognizance of dramatic changes in social conditions which have made legal doctrines once appropriate become unsuited for contemporary society.”¹¹⁴ The court avoided the issue by deferring to the legislative branch, observing that “[i]f social changes have rendered our sodomy statutes unsuitable to the society in which we now live, we need not be concerned about the matter because there is a branch of our government within whose purview the making of appropriate adjustment and changes peculiarly lies.”¹¹⁵

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

Five years later in 1978, the court addressed the constitutional rights of arrestees in Bolden v. State.¹¹⁶ The appellants argued in part that they were prejudiced because the prosecution had failed to comply with Rule 8.1 of the Arkansas Rules of Criminal Procedure, which provides that “[a]n arrested person who is not released by citation or by other lawful manner shall be taken before a judicial officer without unnecessary delay.”¹¹⁷ The court agreed with the appellants’ argument that Rule 8.1 was mandatory, but disagreed that the State’s failure to comply warranted dismissal of the charges.¹¹⁸ Nevertheless, the court acknowledged in passing that the rule was designed in part to protect arrestees’ privacy and liberty interests, which are among the fundamental constitutional rights of arrestees protected by both the state and federal constitutions.¹¹⁹

A decade later, a divided court addressed asserted constitutional privacy interests with respect to public records in McCambridge v. City of Little Rock.¹²⁰ The case involved certain records and photographs associated with the 1987 murder-suicide of John Markle, the son of Mercedes McCambridge, then a well-known actress.¹²¹ McCambridge and the Markle estate sued the City and its police department in an effort to prevent the release of information as to which McCambridge claimed a constitutional right of privacy.¹²² The trial court held that the challenged records were subject to disclosure under the Arkansas Freedom of Information Act.¹²³ On appeal, McCambridge argued in part that releasing the records would amount to a violation of her constitutional right of privacy.¹²⁴

Relying on recent United States Supreme Court decisions, the Arkansas Supreme Court acknowledged that McCambridge had a valid privacy interest in at least some of the criminal investigation records.¹²⁵ The court observed that fundamental privacy interests include the protection of family relationships.¹²⁶ Those interests were directly implicated in McCambridge because one of the documents she sought to protect from disclosure was a long letter her deceased son had written to her just before committing the murder-suicide.¹²⁷ However, the court reasoned that her constitutional privacy interest extended only to “personal matters,” defined as information that a person has intentionally kept private, that could be kept private absent governmental action, and that would be embarrassing to a reasonable person if disclosed.¹²⁸ Applying that standard to the facts, the court concluded that some of the documents in question involved matters personal to McCambridge.¹²⁹

Having determined that McCambridge had a constitutional privacy interest in some of the documents, the court proceeded to balance her constitutional privacy interest against the government’s interest in public disclosure recognized by the Arkansas Freedom of Information Act.¹³⁰ After considering each record one by one, the court concluded that the balance weighed in the government's favor, and therefore none of the records were exempt from disclosure under the Act.¹³¹ The court acknowledged that McCambridge's privacy interest in the contents of the letter her son had written to her was especially high, observing that "[w]hile public figures cannot expect the same degree of privacy as private citizens, they can reasonably expect privacy in personal letters to or from their children."¹³² Nevertheless, the government also had a strong interest in the letter's content because it was relevant to solving the crime.¹³³ The court concluded that the government's interest in disclosure outweighed McCambridge's privacy interests.¹³⁴

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

McCambridge was an important case in the development of Arkansas privacy law because it recognized, for the first time, evolving federal precedent recognizing a constitutional privacy interest in information regarding intimate personal matters. The case also expressly acknowledged that the right of privacy extends to family relationships.¹³⁵ In citing Whalen v. Roe,¹³⁶ the Arkansas Supreme Court acknowledged two basic aspects of constitutional privacy interests: informational privacy, the interest in avoiding disclosure of information pertaining to private matters; and personal autonomy, "the interest in independence in making certain kinds of important decisions."¹³⁷ The first of these was implicated in McCambridge; the second would await direct recognition by the Arkansas Supreme Court thirteen years later in Jegley v. Picado.¹³⁸

The Arkansas Supreme Court once again addressed a constitutional argument pertaining to informational privacy in Arkansas Department of Human Services v. Heath.¹³⁹ Heath, a middle school principal, was the subject of a report to the Department of Human Services alleging a possible incident of child abuse for paddling a student.¹⁴⁰ He challenged the report and ultimately obtained a ruling from the circuit court declaring that the report of child abuse was "unsubstantiated."¹⁴¹ While the Department did not appeal that decision, it challenged the circuit court's order directing it to remove the report from the state's Child Abuse and Neglect Central Registry.¹⁴²

The challenge was based on a state statute¹⁴³ that required the Department to expunge all unfounded reports from the registry after three years.¹⁴⁴ The Department interpreted the statute's affirmative mandate to mean that expungement before three years was not discretionary but rather prohibited as a matter of law.¹⁴⁵ The issue on appeal was whether retaining the report in the state registry after the circuit court had found it unsubstantiated violated Heath's constitutional due process, equal protection, and privacy rights.¹⁴⁶

First, after reviewing the legislative history, the Arkansas Supreme Court agreed with the Department's interpretation that the statute required even unsubstantiated reports of child abuse to be retained in the registry for three years.¹⁴⁷ Nevertheless, the court held that the statute did not violate due process because the plaintiff did not demonstrate that it implicated any property interest, even after the court conceded that the registry information may have been harmful to his professional reputation.¹⁴⁸ The court also rejected Heath's equal protection argument, concluding that the state had a rational basis for classifying subjects of unsubstantiated reports of child abuse differently than innocent persons who had never been accused of child abuse.¹⁴⁹

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

Finally, the court turned to the appellant's privacy challenge. Considering the statutory safeguards that required the Department to flag unfounded reports of child abuse and to restrict disclosure of the information,¹⁵⁰ the court held that no constitutional privacy interest was implicated by maintaining Heath's name in the state registry.¹⁵¹ In reaching that conclusion, the court cited United States Supreme Court and Eighth Circuit precedents upholding analogous government listings of data over privacy challenges.¹⁵²

With this background, the Arkansas Supreme Court revisited the constitutionality of the Arkansas criminal sodomy statute in 2002 in the watershed case Jegley v. Picado,¹⁵³ which struck down the state's criminal sodomy statute¹⁵⁴ as applied to private adult consensual sexual relationships.¹⁵⁵ A group of gay and lesbian Arkansas citizens filed a declaratory judgment action challenging the constitutionality of the statute.¹⁵⁶ The court reviewed the ongoing development of the federal right of privacy, observing that the United States Supreme Court at that time had declined to recognize "a fundamental right to engage in homosexual sodomy"¹⁵⁷ under the federal Constitution. Yet the court concluded that the Arkansas Constitution did protect that right, holding that "the fundamental right to privacy implicit in our law protects all private, consensual, noncommercial acts of sexual intimacy between adults."¹⁵⁸ The court cited Coker in support of a broad reading of the Arkansas Constitution to the extent of protecting a prostitute's right to be accompanied by a man within city limits.¹⁵⁹ The court also reasoned that the Arkansas Constitution requires the General Assembly to extend all privileges and immunities to all citizen classes alike.¹⁶⁰

Jegley represented the Arkansas Supreme Court's willingness to read the Arkansas Constitution to provide greater privacy protections for personal autonomy than did the United States Constitution, as then interpreted. In 2002, the United States Constitution's zones of privacy had not yet been interpreted to protect consensual private sexual activity by same-sex couples.¹⁶¹ Yet Jegley foreshadowed by just a year the United States Supreme Court's 2003 decision overruling its own precedent by holding that the United States Constitution affords homosexuals a fundamental right to engage in consensual sexual activity.¹⁶²

As might be anticipated, Jegley has opened the door to a number of other challenges to Arkansas statutes implicating the fundamental constitutional right of privacy recognized by the Arkansas Supreme Court. These cases raise important questions about the scope of the state constitutional privacy right. In particular, it remains debatable whether the right applies solely to decision making about intimate private consensual sexual activity between adults in their own homes, or whether it reaches more broadly to include informational privacy rights.

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

For example, in 2005, in Polston v. State,¹⁶³ the court considered the constitutional right of privacy of felons in the context of a statute authorizing DNA sampling.¹⁶⁴ Under the State Convicted Offender DNA Database Act,¹⁶⁵ felons must submit to the taking of DNA samples for inclusion in the State Convicted Offender DNA Database.¹⁶⁶ Polston had been convicted on guilty pleas to several drug-related offenses.¹⁶⁷ The court first held that mandatory DNA sampling was not an unreasonable search under the Fourth Amendment, in particular because “a convicted person has a diminished expectation of privacy in the penal context.”¹⁶⁸ Also, the court reasoned that the nature of the challenged intrusion was not substantial under United States Supreme Court precedent.¹⁶⁹ Given these considerations, the appellant’s privacy interests were outweighed by the state government’s substantial interest in collecting and maintaining DNA samples from convicted felons.¹⁷⁰

The appellant, citing Jegley, also asserted that by collecting DNA samples from non-violent felons, the state violated his state constitutional right of privacy, independent of any protections against unreasonable searches and seizures.¹⁷¹ The court crisply dismissed the argument without elaboration, implicitly distinguishing Jegley as having implicated only the right to intimate sexual activity in one’s own home.¹⁷²

A year later in 2006, a clergyman challenged the constitutionality of an Arkansas criminal statute,¹⁷³ contending that it infringed his constitutional right of privacy.¹⁷⁴ The statute in question in *Talbert v. State*¹⁷⁵ prohibits clergymen from using their positions of trust and authority to engage in sexual activity with another;¹⁷⁶ the victim’s consent is not a defense.¹⁷⁷ On appeal from his conviction, the clergyman argued that the statute infringed his constitutional right to privacy under both the United States and Arkansas Constitutions, citing *Lawrence v. Texas*¹⁷⁸ and Jegley v. Picado respectively.¹⁷⁹ As for the due process argument based on Lawrence, the Arkansas Supreme Court held that the appellant had no constitutional right to abuse his position of trust and authority as a clergyman to engage in unwanted sexual activity with his victims.¹⁸⁰ Turning to his claim based on the Arkansas Constitution, the court held that the statute did not infringe on the appellant’s constitutionally protected right to engage in “private, consensual sex,” readily distinguishing Jegley on its facts.¹⁸¹

Also in 2006, in Department of Human Services & Child Welfare Agency Review Board v. Howard,¹⁸² the Arkansas Supreme Court upheld a ruling declaring unconstitutional a regulation adopted in 1999 by the Child Welfare Agency Review Board providing that “[n]o person may serve as a foster parent if any adult member of that person’s household is a homosexual.”¹⁸³ On appeal by the State Department of Human Services, the Arkansas

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

Supreme Court agreed with the circuit court that the regulation exceeded the agency's statutory authority and violated the doctrine of separation of powers. The court reasoned that the regulation failed to promote the health, safety, and welfare of children as required by the agency's authorizing statute¹⁸⁴ and "rather act[ed] to exclude a set of individuals from becoming foster parents based upon morality and bias."¹⁸⁵ The majority declined to address the alternative constitutional arguments the plaintiffs had asserted to the circuit court, including the argument that the regulation violated their state constitutional right of privacy, because those issues were not properly before the court on appeal.¹⁸⁶

Justice Brown concurred but wrote separately to emphasize that he would have reached the privacy issue.¹⁸⁷ Citing Jegley, Justice Brown reasoned that the challenged regulation "overtly and significantly burden[ed] the privacy rights of couples engaged in sexual conduct in the bedroom which . . . has [been] specifically declared to be impermissible as violative of equal-protection and privacy rights."¹⁸⁸

There is no question but that gay and lesbian couples have had their equal-protection and privacy rights truncated without any legitimate and rational basis in the form of foster-child protection for doing so. Indeed, in Jegley, this court held that privacy rights attending sexual conduct in the bedroom between two consenting adults was a fundamental right under the Arkansas Constitution that required strict scrutiny and a compelling state interest to justify interference with it.¹⁸⁹

As explained later, Justice Brown's concurring opinion in Howard foreshadowed the court's unanimous decision five years later in Arkansas Department of Human Services v. Cole.¹⁹⁰

The same year the Arkansas Supreme Court decided Talbert and Howard, the Eighth Circuit addressed the federal and state constitutional right of privacy in Sylvester v. Fogley.¹⁹¹ A former Arkansas police officer alleged that his superiors had violated his constitutional right of privacy under both the United States and Arkansas Constitutions by investigating his consensual sexual relationship with a complaining witness.¹⁹² The officer had been assigned to investigate a complaint by a married couple who believed one of their employees had embezzled funds from their co-owned business.¹⁹³ The husband later complained to police superiors that the officer had engaged in sexual relations with the complainant wife.¹⁹⁴ After an investigation confirmed the complaint and revealed other indiscretions by the officer, he was dismissed.¹⁹⁵ He later sued, alleging that defendants' investigation into his consensual sexual relationship with the female complaining witness violated his constitutional right to privacy under both the United States and Arkansas Constitutions.¹⁹⁶

The Eighth Circuit affirmed the summary judgment entered for the defendants,¹⁹⁷ but declined to consider the substantive right of privacy on which the officer's claim was based.¹⁹⁸ Nevertheless, the court expressed pointed skepticism about the asserted constitutional privacy right, noting that "[o]bscure' might best describe the right of privacy."¹⁹⁹ The panel acknowledged that the Arkansas Supreme Court had identified a fundamental state constitutional right of privacy in the context of private, noncommercial, consensual sexual relationships, and therefore strict scrutiny was the appropriate judicial standard for reviewing an alleged government infringement.²⁰⁰ Assuming, without deciding, that the plaintiff officer had such a right, the court nevertheless held that the government had a compelling interest in investigating allegations that his conduct had seriously compromised the embezzlement investigation.²⁰¹ Furthermore, the court held that the nature and scope of the investigation had been narrowly tailored to the government's compelling interest.²⁰² Therefore, the government's interest in protecting the integrity of the criminal investigation and thus "administering a fair and unbiased criminal-justice system" was compelling, and the investigation had been narrowly tailored to serve that interest.²⁰³

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

Next in the chronology came Cole,²⁰⁴ an important case that helped clarify the boundaries of the state constitutional privacy right recognized in Jegley v. Picado. In 2008, a majority of the voting electorate approved an initiative enactment—the Arkansas Adoption and Foster Care Act of 2008 or "Act I"—in the general election.²⁰⁵ The statute provided that no individual could adopt a child or serve as a foster parent in Arkansas if that person were cohabiting in a sexual relationship outside a marriage considered valid under Arkansas law.²⁰⁶ By its express terms, the statute applied both to cohabiting heterosexual couples as well as same-sex couples.²⁰⁷

The plaintiffs were unmarried adults who sought to become adoptive or foster parents in Arkansas, as well as adult parents who wished to preserve their right to determine who might adopt their children in the event of their death.²⁰⁸ They challenged the statute's constitutionality on various grounds.²⁰⁹ The circuit court, following a hearing, agreed with the plaintiffs and granted summary judgment on their argument that the statute violated their due process, equal protection, and privacy rights under the Arkansas Constitution.²¹⁰ Specifically, the circuit court reasoned that the initiative statute "significantly burden[ed] non-marital relationships and acts of sexual intimacy between adults because it force[d] them to choose between becoming a parent and having any meaningful type of intimate relationship outside of marriage, [which] infringes upon the fundamental right to privacy guaranteed to all citizens of Arkansas."²¹¹

On appeal by the state, the Arkansas Supreme Court affirmed.²¹² First, the court agreed that the statute burdened the plaintiffs' fundamental constitutional right to privacy, and therefore heightened scrutiny applied.²¹³ The court articulated that interest as prohibiting "[t]he intrusion by the State into a couple's bedroom to enforce a sexual prohibition."²¹⁴ Act I substantially burdened the constitutionally protected interest in "engag[ing] in private, consensual sexual conduct in the bedroom by foreclosing their eligibility to foster or adopt children, should they choose to cohabit with their sexual partner.”²¹⁵ The court’s reasoning reflects that the state constitutional right implicated was the right of personal autonomy to make decisions implicating relationship and familial interests.

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

Second, while the state asserted that the enactment sought to advance a compelling interest in protecting the welfare of Arkansas children, the court concluded that the initiative measure failed to use the least restrictive means to serve that interest because it categorically prohibited unmarried couples from adopting or becoming foster parents.²¹⁶

In deciding Cole, the unanimous majority opinion repeatedly referenced the constitutional privacy rights of cohabiting sexual partners, whether heterosexual or homosexual, to decide whether to become parents.²¹⁷ The constitutional challenge by the plaintiffs, who were all cohabiting partners, would not have permitted the court to go further in its holding. Yet the opinion left open the question whether the court would extend the state constitutional privacy right beyond a cohabiting couple’s bedroom.²¹⁸ That opportunity was presented recently in a criminal case involving a high school teacher who had engaged in a consensual sexual relationship with an eighteen-year old high school student.²¹⁹

A deeply divided court addressed the parameters of the state constitutional privacy right in Paschal v. State.²²⁰ Paschal appealed his convictions for second-degree sexual assault and bribing a witness.²²¹ He and an eighteen-year-old high school student had engaged in a consensual sexual relationship²²² in violation of an Arkansas statute prohibiting a public school-teacher from engaging in sexual contact with a student under age twenty-one.²²³ A majority of the court affirmed his conviction for witness bribery but reversed his convictions for sexual assault, reasoning that the criminal statute was unconstitutional as applied because it criminalized private consensual sexual activity between adults and therefore infringed Paschal’s fundamental right to privacy.²²⁴ The majority quoted directly from Jegley v. Picado in defining the Arkansas constitutional right of privacy: “[T]he fundamental right to privacy implicit in our law protects all private, consensual, noncommercial acts of sexual intimacy between adults.”²²⁵ The statute in question made consensual sexual activity between these two adults a crime, and therefore it could not survive constitutional challenge.²²⁶ The fact that one was a high school teacher and the other an adult student was not relevant.

Three justices joined in two lengthy dissenting opinions.²²⁷ They interpreted Jegley v. Picado narrowly, reasoning that the state constitutional privacy right protects “the right . . . for consenting adults to have sexual relations in the privacy of their homes.”²²⁸ They also characterized as “absurd” the majority’s interpretation of the Arkansas constitutional right of privacy to extend to a teacher’s sexual contact with an eighteen-year-old student at a school where the defendant taught.²²⁹ Analogizing to Talbert, the dissenting justices reasoned that the teacher-student relationship is inherently fraught with potential coercion because teachers hold a position of trust and authority that is subject to misuse.²³⁰ Under the circumstances, the dissenters reasoned that the statute did not implicate a fundamental constitutional right, and therefore the court needed only a rational basis to uphold it.²³¹ From the dissenters' perspective, the state had a legitimate interest in enacting a statute protecting schoolchildren from the problems inherently associated with sexual conduct involving school employees, and the challenged statute was rationally related to that interest.²³²

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

In Paschal, a bare majority of the Arkansas Supreme Court interpreted the Arkansas fundamental constitutional right of privacy broadly enough to protect any noncommercial sexual activity or conduct between consenting adults. Over the objections of three justices, the majority declined to confine the privacy right to the bedrooms of cohabiting adults, a rationale the court had unanimously embraced in Cole in striking down Act I. Because the court was so divided, Paschal raises unanswered questions about just how far the court is willing to go in interpreting the fundamental right to privacy protected by the Arkansas Constitution. To date, for example, the court has not addressed the extent to which the state constitutional right extends to informational privacy interests, or whether it protects personal autonomy with respect to matters other than intimate sexual relationships and familial interests.

IV. THE ARKANSAS COMMON LAW RIGHT OF PRIVACY

As noted above, the Arkansas courts have generally recognized the four variations on the common law right of privacy enumerated in the Restatement (Second) of Torts. This section comprehensively addresses each of the four privacy torts as developed by judicial interpretation of Arkansas common law.

A. Appropriation of Name or Likeness

The Arkansas Supreme Court has never had the opportunity to resolve a disputed claim for appropriation of name or likeness on the merits. In Olan Mills, Inc. of Texas v. Dodd, the plaintiff prevailed in a jury trial alleging the unconsented use of her photograph for advertising purposes.²³³ On appeal, the parties did not dispute the jury's finding that Olan Mills had invaded the plaintiff's privacy, and the defendant conceded that she was entitled to nominal damages.²³⁴ But the court upheld a jury verdict awarding the plaintiff $2,500 over the defendant's objection that the law did not support compensatory damages for mental anguish in the absence of physical injury.²³⁵ The

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

Olan Mills court made a point of limiting its holding to the “particular facts of [the] case and the extent of the damages . . . awarded.”²³⁶

Thus, the sole legal issue resolved by Olan Mills was the availability of damages for mental anguish; the court had no occasion in that case to adopt a common law right of privacy.²³⁷ A later decision by the Arkansas Supreme Court would underscore this point and the central substantive question presented in Olan Mills.²³⁸ In 1980, the court suggested that the Olan Mills court had strained to uphold the challenged award of damages on appeal, even to the extent of recognizing an invasion of privacy as a subterfuge to allow recovery for mental injury not accompanied by any physical injury, contrary to the traditional “impact” rule in Arkansas.²³⁹ The court observed that Olan Mills had even “resorted to the right of privacy to support an award” of damages for mental anguish, suggesting that the right of privacy was merely a foil for avoiding the “constructive” physical impact Arkansas courts had long required to support a damage award for mental distress alone.²⁴⁰

The fact that the Arkansas appellate courts have never directly addressed a claim for appropriation of name or likeness on its merits means that the federal courts have taken the lead in diversity cases to predict how the state courts would rule on the issue. In doing so, the federal courts have too narrowly interpreted Olan Mills in identifying the elements of a claim for appropriation of name or likeness. The Arkansas Supreme Court has repeatedly cited the Restatement in clarifying the elements of a privacy claim. For the misappropriation tort, the elements required by the Restatement reflect the underlying basis for the claim: to remedy the mental anguish of a plaintiff whose name or likeness is used by a defendant for its own advantage without the plaintiff’s permission. As explained in detail below, the federal courts have unduly limited the claim to commercial uses by the defendant, in the absence of any contrary holding by the Arkansas courts.²⁴¹

For example, in Stanley v. General Media Communications, Inc.,²⁴² two high school girls sued the publisher of Penthouse Magazine for publishing their names and photograph alongside an article reporting the results of a Florida beach contest held during spring break.²⁴³ They filed a complaint in federal court asserting various claims, including invasion of privacy by misappropriation and false light publicity.²⁴⁴ In enumerating the elements of the misappropriation claim, the federal court cited a comment to the Restatement (Second) of Torts explaining that mere publication of one’s likeness in a commercial newspaper or magazine is not alone sufficient to support a claim for misappropriation.²⁴⁵ Citing a Texas federal district court case, the court held that the defendant must have capitalized on the plaintiff’s likeness to sell more publications,²⁴⁶ citing Olan Mills in concluding that the misappropriation privacy tort requires commercial use of the plaintiff’s name or likeness.²⁴⁷

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

On this reasoning, the federal district court granted the defendants summary judgment.²⁴⁸ First, even though Penthouse had identified the plaintiffs by name and hometown in the article, the court reasoned that they failed to show that they “would be easily identified by the general public,” relying once again on the Texas federal district court case.²⁴⁹ Second, the plaintiffs failed to show that their names or photographs had been used to advertise or otherwise promote sales of the magazine.²⁵⁰ The court concluded that summary judgment was proper because the publisher had not appropriated the plaintiffs’ names or likeness for commercial use.²⁵¹

The Stanley court incorrectly interpreted Olan Mills and the Restatement in holding that the plaintiff must establish a commercial use to support a claim for invasion of privacy by misappropriation. To the contrary, the relevant section of the Restatement and its accompanying comments do not require a commercial use to support the claim.²⁵² Rather, like the Arkansas Model Jury Instructions, the Restatement requires only that the use of plaintiff’s name or likeness must be to the defendant’s advantage, commercial or otherwise.²⁵³ The Restatement’s requirement concerning the nature of the defendant’s use is a straightforward disjunctive standard. Commercial use by the defendant is sufficient, but not necessary, as long as the defendant uses the plaintiff’s name or likeness for the defendant’s own purposes or benefit.²⁵⁴

Unfortunately, the mistake in Stanley was recently replicated in *LasikPlus Murphy, M.D., P.A. v. LCA-Vision, Inc.*²⁵⁵ In that case, an ophthalmologist sued his former affiliate, a laser surgery corporation, in part for sending a patient notification letter bearing his forged digital signature without his consent, and for displaying his name and likeness in its advertising after the affiliation had terminated.²⁵⁶ While the court denied the defendant’s motion to dismiss, it erred in holding that under Arkansas law, “the defendant must have capitalized on the use of the plaintiff’s likeness or name by selling more of a product or service.”²⁵⁷

Olan Mills, the only case the Arkansas Supreme Court has ever decided concerning a claim for misappropriation of name or likeness, undoubtedly involved a use of plaintiff’s likeness for commercial purposes.²⁵⁸ But the defendant in that case did not dispute the merits of the plaintiff’s privacy claim.²⁵⁹ While the Olan Mills court expressly recognized the privacy claim only to the extent of the facts presented, the court’s holding was limited to the sole issue on appeal: whether the plaintiff could recover more than nominal damages despite the lack of physical injury accompanying her claim for mental anguish.²⁶⁰ Nevertheless, the Arkansas Supreme Court has repeatedly cited Olan Mills as authority for having adopted the common law right of privacy in the four iterations defined in the Restatement.²⁶¹ If the Arkansas courts were to squarely address the issue, they would most likely recognize a noncommercial use as sufficient to support a claim for misappropriation,

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers as long as the defendant uses the plaintiff's identity for its own benefit without consent.²⁶²

The other elements of the appropriation claim are straightforward as outlined in the Arkansas Model Jury Instructions.²⁶³ First, the plaintiff must prove damages.²⁶⁴ Second, the defendant must have used the plaintiff's name or likeness.²⁶⁵ Third, the plaintiff must be identifiable by the public from the defendant's use of the plaintiff's identity.²⁶⁶ Fourth, as discussed above, the use must be for the defendant's own purposes or benefit, commercial or otherwise.²⁶⁷ Fifth, the defendant's use must be the proximate cause of the plaintiff's compensable harm.²⁶⁸

Related to the privacy tort for misappropriation of name or likeness is the cause of action for invasion of what is now commonly known as the "right of publicity."²⁶⁹ Neither the Arkansas courts nor the federal courts applying Arkansas law have ever explicitly recognized this cause of action, nor have they had occasion to distinguish it from the right of privacy based on appropriation of the plaintiff's identity.²⁷⁰ A later section of this Article addresses the right of publicity in more detail.²⁷¹ For now, it is sufficient to note that neither Arkansas statutes nor case law has addressed the issue.

B. Intrusion on Seclusion

Unlike other privacy claims, intrusion on seclusion has been a frequent subject of litigation in Arkansas.²⁷² The Arkansas Supreme Court first addressed the claim in 1981 in CBM of Central Arkansas v. Bemel,²⁷³ a debt collection case. The plaintiff sued after the defendant collection agency repeatedly called her at work and at home over a period of ten months to recover a small unpaid balance on a hospital bill for her son, who had been hospitalized after attempting suicide.²⁷⁴ Insurance coverage paid most of the hospital expenses, but a balance of about $400 remained unpaid.²⁷⁵ The collection agency sent the plaintiff some fifty letters and made about seventy phone calls to her during this period.²⁷⁶ Although plaintiff had protested to the defendant's agents that she worked until midnight and therefore slept until about 10:00 a.m., many calls were made to her home in the early morning hours while she was sleeping.²⁷⁷

The case was tried to a jury on alternate theories of invasion of privacy and intentional infliction of emotional distress.²⁷⁸ After the jury awarded Bemel $1,000 in compensatory damages and $4,000 in punitive damages, the trial court denied the collection agency's motion for a directed verdict.²⁷⁹ The Arkansas Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the evidence presented at trial was sufficient to support the jury verdict for intrusion on seclusion, as defined in section 652B of the Restatement (Second) of Torts.²⁸⁰ In particular, the court focused on the frequency and persistence of the collection agency's efforts to collect the debt, which it considered a substantial enough interference with the plaintiff's seclusion to support the claim.²⁸¹

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

The Arkansas Supreme Court next addressed a claim for intrusion on seclusion in Dunlap v. McCarty.²⁸² The complaint alleged invasion of privacy based on verbal communications in two separate phone calls to Mrs. McCarty made by the wife of Mr. McCarty's former brother-in-law.²⁸³ The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiffs but awarded no damages.²⁸⁴ Nevertheless, the defendants appealed, arguing among other things that the action was time-barred and therefore should have been dismissed.²⁸⁵

The Arkansas Supreme Court agreed. The court observed that if the plaintiffs had a privacy claim of any sort, it was a claim for intrusion on seclusion.²⁸⁶ Relying on the Restatement, the court cited several illustrations of conduct that could support a claim for intrusion on seclusion, finding none analogous to two phone calls.²⁸⁷ The court then questioned whether oral communications alone could even support a claim for invasion of privacy, noting that courts had been divided on the issue.²⁸⁸ Leaving that issue aside,²⁸⁹ the court observed that the facts presented did not qualify as either a "classic case of invasion of privacy by intrusion on seclusion or one of defamation."²⁹⁰ But no matter how the claim was denominated, the court observed that the plaintiffs were seeking special damages based solely on oral communications, for which an Arkansas statute specifically provides a one-year statute of limitation.²⁹¹ Because the complaint was filed more than one year after the defendant made the phone calls, the court concluded that the claim was time-barred.²⁹²

Soon after, the court upheld an award of compensatory and punitive damages for invasion of privacy in AAA T.V. & Stereo Rentals, Inc. v. Crawley.²⁹³ The defendant repossessed a rented television set from the plaintiff's home when she was just one week behind in making payments.²⁹⁴ To effect the repossession, the defendant's employees forced open her front door and removed the television while the plaintiff was at work.²⁹⁵ She testified that she had been called off the assembly line, and she was embarrassed and frightened for her children when she learned that unknown intruders had broken into her home.²⁹⁶

On her invasion of privacy claim, the jury awarded $4,590 in compensatory damages and $15,000 in punitive damages.²⁹⁷ Among other issues on appeal, the defendant challenged the trial court's jury instructions, including its failure to define invasion of privacy as "an unreasonable and substantial intrusion upon the seclusion of another."²⁹⁸ The defendant also complained that the jury was instructed that if it found an invasion of privacy, the plaintiff was entitled to "substantial damages."²⁹⁹ The court affirmed, observing that the "jury may well have felt a degree of indignation over the flagrant intrusion suffered by Mrs. Crawley at the hands of AAA's employees"³⁰⁰ Moreover, having interposed only a general objection to the jury instructions at trial, the defendant failed to show reversible error.³⁰¹

The Arkansas appellate courts once again addressed claims of intrusion on seclusion in a pair of companion cases in which co-employees sought

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

damages from Wal-Mart based on an investigation of its employees and recovery of allegedly stolen property.³⁰² In the first, Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Lee,³⁰³ the court upheld a jury verdict awarding the plaintiff a total of $1,651,000 in compensatory and punitive damages.³⁰⁴ Among other claims, the plaintiff alleged intrusion on seclusion and publicity placing him in a false light.³⁰⁵ On appeal, Wal-Mart argued that the plaintiff's evidence was insufficient to establish the essential elements of intrusion,³⁰⁶ which the majority carefully enumerated by directly quoting the jury instruction.³⁰⁷

In affirming the judgment and jury verdict, the court explicitly adopted the Restatement definition of intrusion on seclusion,³⁰⁸ observing that the "touchstone" of the privacy tort for intrusion is "[a] legitimate expectation of privacy."³⁰⁹ While neither party challenged the jury instruction, it was closely patterned after the Restatement definition,³¹⁰ listing the following elements: (1) damages sustained by plaintiff; (2) intrusion by defendant, physically or otherwise, on plaintiff's solitude without permission, invitation, or valid consent; (3) substantial interference by defendant with plaintiff's solitude; (4) interference of a kind an ordinary person would consider highly offensive; (5) conduct by defendant to which a reasonable person would object; and (6) proximate causation.³¹¹ The jury was also instructed that "[a] person validly consents to an intrusion if, in the totality of circumstances, the consent is given freely and without coercion."³¹²

On appeal, Wal-Mart argued that the plaintiff offered insufficient evidence to support two essential elements of the intrusion claim: that the defendant's interference was substantial, and that the plaintiff had a legitimate expectation of privacy.³¹³ Both points rested on the underlying argument that the plaintiff had consented to defendant's allegedly intrusive conduct not only verbally and in writing, but also implicitly by failing to object while the investigation and search were underway on his property.³¹⁴

The court observed that an actionable intrusion occurs only if the defendant believes or is substantially certain that he lacks permission to engage in the intrusive conduct.³¹⁵ Because the defendant's actual knowledge that he lacks permission is an essential element, the plaintiff has the burden to prove the defendant was aware, or at least substantially certain, that the plaintiff did not consent.³¹⁶ In this respect, the plaintiff must prove not only that he did not consent, but also that the defendant in fact believed (or at least was substantially certain) that the plaintiff did not consent.³¹⁷

Despite this heavy burden of proof, the Arkansas Supreme Court in Lee upheld the jury verdict, along with its finding that the plaintiff had successfully established each required element.³¹⁸ The majority reasoned that the evidence showed that any verbal consent he gave was limited in scope, which the defendant's investigation and search had far exceeded.³¹⁹ With respect to the plaintiff's written consent, the jury correctly concluded that it was involuntary and hence invalid because it had been coerced.³²⁰

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

One justice added a lengthy dissent challenging the majority's conclusion that the plaintiff had not validly consented to the defendant's investigation and search.³²¹ The dissenter reasoned that the plaintiff could not have had a legitimate expectation of privacy when he gave both verbal and written consent to the search.³²² Further, the dissent would have held that the evidence "overwhelmingly" established that plaintiff's consent was both knowing and voluntary because the written form he signed had specifically authorized the defendant's agents to search plaintiff's entire premises and take any property they deemed necessary.³²³ Nor did the plaintiff object or otherwise indicate that the search should be limited in scope.³²⁴

The dispositive issue in Lee turned out to be whether the plaintiff's verbal, written, and implied consent was "valid," defined as "given freely and without coercion."³²⁵ As the majority observed, the issue of consent and the scope of any consent are both fact questions for the jury.³²⁶ The plaintiff believed he had verbally consented only to a limited search for fishing equipment and lifejackets, and he was under the impression he would be fired if he refused consent.³²⁷ While the defendant's evidence contradicted the plaintiff's testimony, the majority correctly observed that the credibility of witness testimony was a question of fact for the jury to resolve.³²⁸ In this case, the majority identified substantial evidence in the record supporting the jury's decision.³²⁹

In the second companion case, Addington v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.,³³⁰ the plaintiff did not fare so well before the trial court. The defendant won summary judgment on all claims, including intrusion on seclusion.³³¹ On appeal, the Arkansas Court of Appeals followed the precedent established in Lee,³³² holding that summary judgment on the intrusion claim was precluded because genuine issues of material fact remained concerning whether Addington's consent to the search was valid.³³³ The court cited Lee in reasoning that while the standard for determining the validity of consent to search in a criminal context was not controlling, it was nevertheless "helpful."³³⁴ Thus, "[c]onsent must be given freely and voluntarily to be valid."³³⁵

It must be shown that there was no duress or coercion, actual or implied. The voluntariness of consent must be judged in light of the totality of the circumstances. In a civil case, the issue of whether consent was valid is a question of fact that must be decided by the trier of fact.³³⁶

Observing that the Arkansas Supreme Court had upheld a jury verdict for the plaintiff under similar circumstances, the Court of Appeals reversed the summary judgment and remanded for trial.³³⁷

More recently, in Coombs v. J.B. Hunt Transport, Inc.,³³⁸ the Arkansas Court of Appeals addressed a claim for intrusion on seclusion against the plaintiff's former employer and two of its vice-presidents. The employer sued a former employee for violating a covenant not to compete, and the plaintiff counterclaimed; he also filed a third-party complaint against two of his former co-employees for invasion of privacy, wrongful discharge, and related claims.³³⁹ During an out-of-town retreat with several other employees, Coombs had become intoxicated and retreated to the hotel room he shared with Allensworth, one of the third-party defendants.³⁴⁰ There, Coombs passed out on the floor, still fully clothed.³⁴¹ Sometime later, Allensworth and Emerson, the other third-party defendant, entered the hotel room and found Coombs asleep on the floor.³⁴² Using a cell phone, the two photographed Coombs in a prone position after placing a cigarette in his mouth, spraying his face with shaving cream, and writing messages on his person.³⁴³ One of the pranksters called other employees into the hotel room to view Coombs in this vulnerable state.³⁴⁴ Coombs recalled none of these events the next morning, but he later learned what happened when he viewed the photographs depicting him in various states of undress.³⁴⁵ The photographs were also allegedly displayed to other employees.³⁴⁶

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

The trial court granted the employer summary judgment on the intrusion counterclaim, reasoning that Coombs was aware that he was sharing the hotel room with another person and had voluntarily become intoxicated.³⁴⁷ On appeal, the Court of Appeals reversed after reiterating the elements of the intrusion claim as enumerated in the Arkansas Model Jury Instructions.³⁴⁸ The court rejected the trial court's reasoning that the hotel room was shared, noting that a physical intrusion is not necessary to support the claim.³⁴⁹ "Thus, protection is afforded not just for the physical realm but for a person's emotional sanctum and to safeguard the notions of civility and personal dignity. Further, a person's visibility to some does not necessarily strip him of the right to remain secluded from others."³⁵⁰ The court could not agree with the trial court that no intrusion had occurred as a matter of law.³⁵¹

The Court of Appeals also rejected the employer's argument that the intrusion, if any, was not highly offensive to a reasonable person.³⁵² It reasoned that a fact finder could view the acts of the third-party defendants as "an invasion of Coombs's bodily space during a time when he was unaware of his surroundings and as making him an object of ridicule among his co-workers."³⁵³

Finally, the court identified an unresolved fact issue: whether Coombs had comported himself in a manner consistent with an "actual" expectation of privacy.³⁵⁴ The court reviewed the allegations by both parties and found them inconclusive enough to present a fact issue precluding summary judgment.³⁵⁵

The Court of Appeals also addressed an issue of first impression in the context of a claim for invasion of privacy: whether an employer can be vicariously liable for intrusive conduct committed by its supervisory employees.³⁵⁶ Coombs argued in part that the former employer could be liable for the acts of its employees under a respondeat superior theory.³⁵⁷ The court agreed, relying on Arkansas cases holding that an employer may be vicari-

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

ously liable for acts of its employees carried out in the scope of employment.³⁵⁸ In this case, the co-employees' conduct occurred during a work retreat at which the plaintiff's attendance was mandatory.³⁵⁹ It was a fact question whether the offensive conduct was "purely personal" or occurred while the co-employees were acting in the course of their employment responsibilities.³⁶⁰ The court concluded that "[w]hen an overlap of the business and the personal are present in an employee's actions, an employer may be vicariously liable under the doctrine of respondeat superior, depending on the circumstances."³⁶¹

In late 2012, the Arkansas Supreme Court addressed some intriguing issues of first impression with respect to an intrusion claim in Cannady v. St. Vincent Infirmary Medical Center.³⁶² Compared to the court's progressive resolution of privacy issues over the last decade, the Arkansas Supreme Court took a surprisingly regressive approach to the novel legal issues the case presented. The case involved the tragic murder of Anne Pressly, a well-known Little Rock newswoman.³⁶³ Her mother, Patricia Cannady, sued the hospital and three of its employees alleging invasion of privacy and intentional infliction of emotional distress.³⁶⁴ Cannady sued on her own behalf and as administratrix of Pressly's estate.³⁶⁵

Cannady claimed that the defendant hospital employees had unlawfully accessed Pressly's medical records and failed to take proper steps to prevent improper access to medical records in the hospital's electronic database.³⁶⁶ The three employees were each convicted after pleading guilty to violating the federal Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act (HIPAA),³⁶⁷ which criminalizes wrongful disclosure of individually identifiable health information.³⁶⁸ Therefore, the defendants had no basis for disputing either the intrusion itself or that it was intentional.

Cannady appealed after the trial court granted summary judgment on all claims, not only those filed on her own behalf but also those filed on behalf of the Pressly estate.³⁶⁹ With respect to the intrusion claim on behalf of the estate, the trial court held that the claim did not survive the decedent.³⁷⁰ On appeal, Cannady argued that the trial court had erred in interpreting the Arkansas survival statute³⁷¹ to mean that Pressly's privacy claim did not survive.³⁷² The Arkansas Supreme Court affirmed on the survival issue.³⁷³ In rejecting the privacy claim on behalf of the estate, the court relied primarily on Ward v. Blackwood,³⁷⁴ an Arkansas case decided nearly a century and a half earlier, long before any court in the United States had ever recognized the right of privacy.³⁷⁵

Under the Restatement, a claim for invasion of privacy is generally considered personal in nature because it involves an injury to a personal right.³⁷⁶ Thus, the legal question before the Cannady court was whether a claim for invasion of the personal right of privacy survives after the death of the person whose privacy has been invaded.³⁷⁷

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

The court quoted the following subsections of the applicable Arkansas survival statute:

(a)(1) For wrongs done to the person or property of another, an action may be maintained against a wrongdoer, and the action may be brought by the person injured or, after his or her death, by his or her executor or administrator against the wrongdoer or, after the death of the wrongdoer, against the executor or administrator of the wrongdoer, in the same manner and with like effect in all respects as actions founded on contracts.

(2) Nothing in subdivision (a)(1) of this section shall be so construed as to extend its provisions to actions of slander or libel.³⁷⁸

The plain language of the subsection (a) suggests that the estate may assert a claim for invasion of privacy after the person's death because invasion of privacy is undoubtedly a "wrong[] done to the person . . . of another."³⁷⁹

To the contrary, the Arkansas Supreme Court held otherwise.³⁸⁰ Relying on the 1883 case of Ward, which had interpreted "an earlier version" of the survival statute,³⁸¹ the court held that the current version preserves only actions substantially characterized by bodily injury or physical damage, not "torts which do not directly affect the person, but only the feelings or reputation, such as malicious prosecution."³⁸² The court rejected Cannady's argument that the only torts excepted from the survival statute are libel and slander, as expressly provided in subsection (a)(2).³⁸³

In reaching its conclusion, the court acknowledged but declined to follow other jurisdictions that have allowed a cause of action for invasion of privacy by surviving relatives based on facts similar to those presented in Cannady.³⁸⁴ Instead, the court cited and quoted at length from a 1913 Arkansas case³⁸⁵ holding that claims on behalf of a defunct corporation did not survive its dissolution.³⁸⁶ In that case, the court had reasoned in part that "the statute means injuries of a physical character to actual, visible, and tangible property, and not to property rights or interests which in their nature are invisible and intangible."³⁸⁷

The court ultimately agreed with the defendants' arguments that the survival statute "[did] not provide for the claim of invasion of privacy to survive the death of the decedent."³⁸⁸ In doing so, the court ignored the undisputed fact that the defendants' conduct had been so egregious with respect to the decedent's privacy interests that they had pleaded guilty to federal criminal offenses for violating HIPAA's privacy protections.³⁸⁹ The Arkansas Supreme Court's reasoning relied largely on common law that long predates not only the court's own recognition of the right of privacy, but also the court's recognition of other intentional tort claims that allow recovery for emotional injury independent of any physical injury or property damage.³⁹⁰

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

In relying on century-old common law, the court also disregarded the language of the modern Arkansas survival statute, which plainly allows for the survival of claims “[f]or wrongs done to the person or property of another,”³⁹¹ excepting only claims for slander or libel.³⁹² While the Arkansas Supreme Court has not questioned its own outdated interpretation of the survival statute, the Arkansas General Assembly itself has amended the statute to recognize “wrongs” to the person manifested by emotional and other intangible harm.³⁹³ Most recently, the survival statute was amended in 2001 to include a new subsection (b) that explicitly allows an estate to seek damages for “loss of life,” a category of intangible injury,³⁹⁴ in addition to any other elements of recoverable damages.³⁹⁵ Yet the Cannady court completely omitted that subsection from the statutory language the opinion directly quoted.³⁹⁶

In short, the Cannady court erred by ignoring the plain language of the current survival statute, considered in the context of common law developments in the latter half of the twentieth century. At the very least, the court should have acknowledged the 2001 amendment and its implications for outmoded case law that interpreted former survival statutes to exclude personal torts resulting in noneconomic or intangible harm. Cannady represents an unfortunate step backward in Arkansas privacy law. The opinion fails to acknowledge that the survival statute itself is a departure from the common law rule that tort actions did not survive the plaintiff.³⁹⁷

Especially in light of the 2001 amendment, the fact that the Arkansas courts have never questioned century-old case interpretations of the predecessor survival statutes is irrelevant. The court has held that in construing statutes, the language in question must be considered “in the context of the statute as a whole.”³⁹⁸ The Arkansas General Assembly had no reason to include a specific provision in the survival statute excluding defamation claims unless it had intended the general reference to “wrongs to the person” to allow survival of other “wrongs done to the person or property of another.”³⁹⁹ Moreover, a statute must be interpreted “just as it reads, giving the words their ordinary and usually accepted meaning in common language.”⁴⁰⁰ Cannady reflects an unduly strained interpretation of the Arkansas survival statute given the developments in Arkansas privacy law over the last half century.

Occasionally the federal courts have interpreted Arkansas common law in resolving claims alleging intrusion on seclusion. While not binding on Arkansas courts, a number of these federal cases are cited in commentary to the Arkansas Model Jury Instructions.⁴⁰¹ The earliest was *Williams v. American Broadcasting Companies, Inc.*⁴⁰² The opinion primarily addressed a question of federal evidence law pertaining to the reporter’s privilege asserted in consolidated cases involving the same incident.⁴⁰³ However, the court also addressed one of the plaintiffs’ claims for invasion of privacy.⁴⁰⁴

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

The facts of Williams presented a classic example of intrusion on seclusion by virtue of overzealous news reporting. Defendant ABC aired a segment of its 20/20 television program in January 1981, addressing the extent to which the medical profession was engaging in unnecessary surgery.⁴⁰⁵ The program allegedly included portions of a videotape taken by defendant's reporters of Mrs. Davidson, without her knowledge or consent, while she was undergoing hip replacement surgery at Boone County Hospital, performed by Dr. Williams.⁴⁰⁶ In considering the parties' respective interests relevant to the assertion of the reporter's privilege, the court delineated the four distinct causes of action for invasion of privacy recognized by Professor Prosser, including intrusion on seclusion.⁴⁰⁷

This tort requires actions on the defendant's part in the nature of prying or intrusion which is offensive or objectionable to a reasonable person. The "thing" into which there is intrusion or prying must be, and be entitled to be, private. As Prosser notes, "when the plaintiff is confined to a hospital bed, and in all probability when he is merely in the seclusion of his home, the making of a photograph is an invasion of a private right, of which he is entitled to complain."⁴⁰⁸

The court concluded that the reporters' "outtakes" sought in discovery might be relevant to prove the fact of the alleged intrusion and its extent, so they were "clearly discoverable."⁴⁰⁹

The United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit also addressed a claim for intrusion on seclusion under Arkansas law in *Alexander v. Pathfinder, Inc.*⁴¹⁰ Mrs. Alexander filed several state and federal claims against the defendants, an intermediate care facility for the mentally retarded, its employees, and others, after her son was discharged from the facility.⁴¹¹ Among other state law claims, she sued for intrusion on seclusion.⁴¹² She alleged that the facility's employees had improperly audiotaped her conversations with her son, including some conversations in his room, as well as her personal conversations with facility staff.⁴¹³

The Eighth Circuit upheld the dismissal of Alexander's intrusion claims on the basis of implied consent because she had not objected when facility staff overtly audiotaped her conversations.⁴¹⁴ Alexander had previously testified at an administrative hearing that she had not objected when facility employees entered her son's room carrying tape recorders for the apparent purpose of recording her conversations with him.⁴¹⁵ Although the administrative record indicated that she had later objected, the court held that her failure to do so at the inception was "fatal" to that part of her intrusion claim.⁴¹⁶ With respect to the recording of her own conversations with facility staff, Mrs. Alexander knew the staff had been directed to record all her conversations, and the court observed that no Arkansas law precluded one party to a conversation from recording a conversation with the other party's knowledge.⁴¹⁷ Therefore, the trial court had properly dismissed both of her intrusion claims.⁴¹⁸

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

In 2000, the Eighth Circuit once again addressed a claim under Arkansas law for intrusion on seclusion in *Fletcher v. Price Chopper Foods of Trumann, Inc.*⁴¹⁹ The plaintiff, a food service worker, sued her former employer for intrusion on seclusion for contacting her physician to determine whether she had a staph infection at the time she was terminated.⁴²⁰ When the plaintiff applied for unemployment compensation, she denied having a staph infection at the time of her termination.⁴²¹ To secure the medical information, the defendant's corporate manager supplied plaintiff's physician with a worker's compensation authorization the plaintiff had signed previously after she sustained an on-the-job injury a few days before developing the infection.⁴²²

The jury awarded plaintiff compensatory and punitive damages.⁴²³ The trial court set aside the punitive damages award but allowed the verdict awarding compensatory damages to stand.⁴²⁴ Because the sole cause of action was intrusion on seclusion, the Eighth Circuit panel⁴²⁵ reviewed applicable Arkansas law in some detail.⁴²⁶ The majority concluded that the evidence was insufficient to permit the jury to find that the manager's intrusion highly offensive to a reasonable person,⁴²⁷ that plaintiff's conduct in telling a co-worker about her staph infection was consistent with any subjective intent to keep the medical information private,⁴²⁸ and that any expectation of privacy she did have was objectively reasonable considering her employment in the food service industry.⁴²⁹

Summarizing Arkansas law defining the privacy tort of intrusion on seclusion, the courts have repeatedly deferred to the applicable provisions of the Restatement (Second) of Torts and its commentary.⁴³⁰ Consistent with the Restatement, the Arkansas Model Jury Instruction requires five elements: (1) damages sustained by the plaintiff; (2) an intentional intrusion, either physical or otherwise, on the plaintiff's seclusion or solitude, to which the defendant believed or was substantially certain the plaintiff did not validly consent; (3) an intrusion highly offensive to a reasonable person, caused by defendant's conduct to which a reasonable person would strongly object; (4) an actual expectation of privacy manifested by the plaintiff's conduct; and (5) a proximate nexus between the intrusion and plaintiff's damages.⁴³¹ The second and fourth elements impose on the plaintiff the burden to show the absence of valid consent, whether express or implied, to the defendant's intrusion.⁴³² Notwithstanding the plain language of the Arkansas survival statute, the Arkansas Supreme Court has recently held that a claim for intrusion does not survive the death of the person whose privacy was invaded by the defendant's intrusive conduct.⁴³³

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

C. Publicity Given to Private Facts

While the Arkansas appellate courts have never directly addressed an action for giving publicity to private facts, on several occasions they have recognized the existence of the claim in dicta.⁴³⁴ Applying Arkansas law, the federal courts have occasionally addressed this privacy tort, predicting that Arkansas courts would apply the definition and guidelines outlined in the Restatement (Second) of Torts.⁴³⁵ The Arkansas Supreme Court has published a jury instruction enumerating the elements of the claim, modeled after the relevant provisions of the Restatement.⁴³⁶

Consistent with the Restatement,⁴³⁷ the plaintiff must establish seven essential elements to successfully litigate a claim for invasion of privacy by public disclosure of private facts: (1) plaintiff sustained damages; (2) defendant made a public disclosure about plaintiff; (3) before the disclosure, the public lacked knowledge of the fact; (4) the disclosure of the fact would be highly offensive to a reasonable person; (5) the defendant knew or should have known that the fact disclosed was private; (6) the fact disclosed was not of “legitimate public concern”; and (7) the public disclosure was the proximate cause of the plaintiff’s damages.⁴³⁸

To satisfy the second element requiring “public disclosure,” the plaintiff must establish that the defendant communicated the fact “to the public at large or to so many persons that the matter is substantially certain to become one of public knowledge.”⁴³⁹ It is not sufficient to establish “publication” of the fact to just one or a small number of persons; the fact must be highly likely to become a matter of public knowledge.⁴⁴⁰ The federal courts have twice rejected privacy claims for publicity given to private facts for lack of evidence to support the “public disclosure” element.⁴⁴¹

The federal courts first acknowledged such a claim under Arkansas law in *Boyd v. Thomson Newspaper Publishing Co.*⁴⁴² In that case, the court held in part that the information disclosed pertained to a matter of legitimate public concern, and therefore the plaintiffs failed to state a claim.⁴⁴³ In Boyd, the parents of a deceased three-year-old child sued the newspaper for publishing an article that reported the child’s full name and the fact that he had allegedly died as a result of cardiac arrest while under anesthesia administered by a physician, who was then a defendant in an unrelated wrongful death case alleging medical malpractice.⁴⁴⁴ In a court hearing involving a discovery matter, the trial court suggested that the parties should protect the privacy interests of patients who had died under similar circumstances.⁴⁴⁵ The next morning, the newspaper reported the trial court’s ruling that evidence concerning others who had died under anesthesia, including plaintiffs’ son, would be admissible at trial.⁴⁴⁶ The child’s parents claimed that by printing his name and implying that he had died as a result of improper medical care, the newspaper had invaded their privacy.⁴⁴⁷

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

The court disagreed and dismissed the complaint for failure to state a claim, citing alternative grounds.⁴⁴⁸ First, the court predicted that Arkansas courts would not recognize a relational privacy interest on behalf of the plaintiffs for an alleged invasion of their deceased son's privacy.⁴⁴⁹ Second, the court held that the information was a matter of legitimate public concern because their son had been a victim of a tragic fatal accident.⁴⁵⁰ The court reasoned that his death had again become a matter of legitimate public concern ancillary to the then-pending medical malpractice action against his anesthesiologist.⁴⁵¹

The federal court once again addressed a claim under Arkansas law for publicity given to private facts in *Wood v. National Computer Systems, Inc.*⁴⁵² An Arkansas teacher filed a diversity claim for invasion of privacy against a testing company for erroneously mailing her teacher certification test results to another teacher who had taken the same test.⁴⁵³ The plaintiff promptly reported the error to the media, and within three days she received her successful test results.⁴⁵⁴ The district court held in part that she could not support her claim for giving publicity to private facts because her scores had been sent inadvertently to only one other individual.⁴⁵⁵ Furthermore, any public knowledge about the incident was attributable to the plaintiff's own contacts with local media, not any wrongful conduct by the defendant.⁴⁵⁶ Therefore, even if the information had become a matter of public knowledge, it was not the result of defendant's conduct.

In a more recent bankruptcy case, Dunbar v. Cox Health Alliance, LLC,⁴⁵⁷ the federal district court once again held that the plaintiff failed to meet the "publicity" requirement of her privacy claim.⁴⁵⁸ A creditor had electronically filed a proof of claim that erroneously included the plaintiff's date of birth and medical information, in violation of court rules.⁴⁵⁹ While the document was accessible via the federal court's electronic case filing system, the court reasoned that the public could not access the document without taking specific affirmative steps to seek out the information.⁴⁶⁰ Just because bankruptcy court records technically qualify as public records was not enough to satisfy the "publicity" element of the claim.⁴⁶¹ Further, the plaintiff did not assert that anyone had actually accessed the proof of claim or her personal information, which had been accessible by the public for only three days.⁴⁶² Therefore, the plaintiff failed to state a claim.⁴⁶³

A disclosure is "highly offensive to a reasonable person" only if a person would be seriously upset or embarrassed by the disclosure.⁴⁶⁴ The standard excludes normal everyday activities, or even "unflattering conduct" that would cause only minor or moderate annoyance to a person with "ordinary sensitivities."⁴⁶⁵

If the information publicized relates to a matter of "legitimate public concern," a claim for publicity given to private facts is defeated. To determine whether this affirmative defense bars the claim, several factors must be considered:⁴⁶⁶

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

(1) the social value of the fact published, (2) the depth of the intrusion into [plaintiff's] private affairs, (3) the extent to which [plaintiff] voluntarily placed [himself][herself] into a position of public notoriety, [(4) the nature of the state's interest in preventing the disclosure,] (5) whether the fact is a matter of public record [and (6) if the fact publicized concerned events that occurred in the past, whether there is any continued public interest in the fact published].⁴⁶⁷

As previously noted, a federal district court concluded in 1980 that the information there at issue was a matter of legitimate public concern, and therefore could not support a claim for publicity given to private facts.⁴⁶⁸

One federal case alleging violation of the plaintiff's constitutional right of privacy is particularly instructive on the element requiring proof that the defendant knew the information disclosed was private.⁴⁶⁹ In Holman v. Central Arkansas Broadcasting Co.,⁴⁷⁰ plaintiff attorney and his wife were arrested and detained in jail on several charges, including driving while intoxicated.⁴⁷¹ When counsel arrived to secure the couple's release, the plaintiff attorney began "hollering, cussing and screaming."⁴⁷² Defendant's reporter was nearby with a tape recorder, which picked up the outburst.⁴⁷³ The court held that the plaintiff could not have made the statements the reporter could easily overhear with an expectation that the communications would be private, and therefore the allegations did not support a civil rights claim under Title 42 U.S.C. § 1983.⁴⁷⁴ The court also observed that "no right to privacy is invaded when state officials allow or facilitate publication of an official act such as an arrest."⁴⁷⁵

Given the dearth of Arkansas precedent interpreting the seven essential elements of publicity given to private facts, the Arkansas courts are likely to defer to the Restatement (Second) of Torts to resolve any other issues not specifically addressed in the Arkansas Model Jury Instructions, just as they have done for other common law privacy claims.

D. False Light Publicity

After intrusion on seclusion, the most frequently litigated privacy claim in Arkansas is publicity placing plaintiff in a false light. The Arkansas Supreme Court first recognized a claim for false light publicity in *Dodrill v. Arkansas Democrat Co.*⁴⁷⁶ The defendant newspaper had published a story erroneously reporting that the plaintiff, an attorney whose law license had been suspended, failed his required retake of the bar examination.⁴⁷⁷ The plaintiff sued the newspaper for both defamation and false light invasion of privacy.⁴⁷⁸ The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendant on both claims, and the plaintiff appealed.⁴⁷⁹

The Arkansas Supreme Court reversed summary judgment on the defamation claim, rejecting the trial court's conclusion that the plaintiff was a

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

public figure and could not prove the newspaper acted with actual malice.⁴⁸⁰ The court remanded that claim to the trial court with instructions to apply the negligence standard of fault to the plaintiff's defamation claim—whether the defendant failed to exercise ordinary care before publishing the defamatory article.⁴⁸¹ The court added that a finding of negligence would support the defamation claim, but punitive damages could not be awarded in the absence of a finding of actual malice.⁴⁸²

The court then turned to the summary judgment denying plaintiff's privacy claim.⁴⁸³ After acknowledging the existence of the false light claim under Arkansas law,⁴⁸⁴ the court affirmed for lack of evidence that the defendant either knowingly published the false information, or that the defendant acted with actual malice, defined as reckless disregard as to the truth or falsity of the published material.⁴⁸⁵ The court apparently reasoned that even if the plaintiff was not a public figure, he was still required to prove actual malice to support his false light claim because the publication's subject matter (whether or not a previously suspended lawyer qualified for readmission) was a matter of public concern.⁴⁸⁶ Relying on New York Times Co. v. Sullivan,⁴⁸⁷ the court held that the plaintiff had the burden to prove actual malice by clear and convincing evidence.⁴⁸⁸ Because the plaintiff failed to do so, the trial court properly granted summary judgment for the defendant on the false light claim.⁴⁸⁹

The Arkansas Supreme Court next addressed a false light claim in Dodson v. Dicker.⁴⁹⁰ The defendant, a private citizen, had written a letter to several state officials making disparaging remarks about the individual then serving as president of the State Board of Therapy Technology and her spouse, David Dicker.⁴⁹¹ Mr. Dicker alone sued for defamation and false light invasion of privacy.⁴⁹² At trial, he won a jury award of $7,000 in actual damages and $5,000 in punitive damages.⁴⁹³ On appeal, the court reversed, holding that the trial court should have granted a directed verdict on both claims.⁴⁹⁴ The court reasoned that nothing in the defendant's letter to state officials reasonably could be considered an assertion of objective fact, as required to support a defamation claim.⁴⁹⁵

With respect to the false light claim, the court observed that while Mr. Dicker was not himself a public figure, the letter's content addressed matters of general public concern; therefore, the plaintiff was required to prove by clear and convincing evidence that the defendant had acted with actual malice in transmitting the letter.⁴⁹⁶ The court considered the evidence pertaining to defendant's subjective state of mind when she wrote the letter, concluding that she had been motivated not by actual malice but rather her general dissatisfaction with the State Board's operations.⁴⁹⁷ Under the circumstances, the defendant's First Amendment freedom of speech prevailed over the plaintiff's privacy concerns.⁴⁹⁸

As reflected in Dodrill and Dodson, a plaintiff may join defamation and false light invasion of privacy claims in the same proceeding.⁴⁹⁹ However, the plaintiff may recover only once for any single publication.⁵⁰⁰ While the claims are related, defamation remedies harm to one's reputation, while a false light claim redresses the emotional injury associated with publicity casting the person in a false light.⁵⁰¹ While required to support a defamation claim, reputational harm is not required to support an invasion of privacy claim for false light.⁵⁰²

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

The Eighth Circuit addressed a claim for false light invasion of privacy in *People's Bank & Trust Co. of Mountain Home v. Globe International Publishing, Inc.*⁵⁰³ An elderly woman recovered a sizeable money judgment against a tabloid publisher for portraying her as a pregnant 101-year old woman.⁵⁰⁴ The publisher argued on appeal that the published story was obviously fictional, and therefore not actionable, because the content of the story was not reasonably believable.⁵⁰⁵ The court disagreed, holding that it could not say as a matter of law that the story accompanying the plaintiff's photograph, when read as a whole, was not reasonably believable to readers as conveying actual facts about the plaintiff, even though some would strain credulity.⁵⁰⁶ Moreover, the court rejected the publisher's argument that the supermarket tabloid was obviously intended as fiction and therefore could not support a claim for portraying the plaintiff in a false light.⁵⁰⁷ To the contrary, the court held that the tabloid's style and format suggested the publisher's intent that readers believe its material was factual.⁵⁰⁸ Therefore, the story was a calculated falsehood that would support a remedy without implicating First Amendment considerations.⁵⁰⁹

Finally, the publisher challenged the sufficiency of the evidence to support a finding of actual malice.⁵¹⁰ The court observed that mere failure to investigate the accuracy of a published falsity is not sufficient.⁵¹¹ However, "purposeful avoidance of the truth is in a different category."⁵¹² In this case, the editor who selected the photograph to accompany the story was aware that it portrayed the plaintiff ten years earlier, but he assumed she had since died.⁵¹³ In 1980, the defendant's editor had been working for the local newspaper when it published the same photograph to illustrate an accurate story about the plaintiff.⁵¹⁴ Under the circumstances, the court held that the evidence was sufficient to support the jury's finding that the defendant had purposefully avoided the truth when it published the plaintiff's photograph to accompany a fabricated story.⁵¹⁵

In two companion cases discussed earlier in this Article,⁵¹⁶ the Arkansas Supreme Court addressed claims for false light invasion of privacy as well as other privacy claims.⁵¹⁷ In Lee, the court addressed the appellant's argument that the evidence failed to show actual malice.⁵¹⁸ In doing so, the court carefully sidestepped whether a private figure is required to prove actual malice in the first place when the facts publicized do not pertain to a matter of public concern.⁵¹⁹ Citing Gertz v. Robert Welch, Inc.,⁵²⁰ the court held that plaintiffs other than public figures need not prove actual malice to recover for defamation.⁵²¹ Nevertheless, noting that neither party had challenged the trial court's jury instruction requiring proof of the elements by clear and convincing evidence, the court reviewed the evidence with that standard in mind.⁵²² On the issue of actual malice, the record included clear and convincing evidence, when viewed most favorably to the plaintiff, that supported the finding of actual malice.⁵²³

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

In Addington, the court reached the opposite conclusion.⁵²⁴ The plaintiff's false light claim was denied on summary judgment.⁵²⁵ On appeal, the court upheld the disposition of that claim.⁵²⁶ The court reasoned that the plaintiff failed to present evidence that the offending statements were false.⁵²⁷ Even if they were, the court held that they were protected by qualified privilege.⁵²⁸ In this case, unlike in Lee, the court held that the defendant had good reason to believe that Addington possessed property that was rightfully the defendant's, and therefore the plaintiff failed to overcome the qualified immunity defense.⁵²⁹

The most recent case addressing a claim for invasion of privacy by false light publicity was Hobbs v. Pasdar.⁵³⁰ The plaintiff, the stepfather of one of the three young murder victims in the case commonly known as the "West Memphis 3," sued the members of the Dixie Chicks, a singing group, for defamation and false light invasion of privacy.⁵³¹ The plaintiff challenged the veracity of a statement posted on the defendants' website as well as certain statements they had made at a fundraising rally implicating him in the murders.⁵³² After lengthy analysis, the trial court granted summary judgment on both claims.⁵³³ The dispositive issue was whether the plaintiff was a "limited purpose" public figure. The court reasoned that he was because he had voluntarily injected himself in various ways into the public controversy regarding the murders.⁵³⁴ The court also correctly observed that a limited purpose public figure must establish the element of actual malice by clear and convincing evidence to substantiate a claim for either defamation or false light invasion of privacy.⁵³⁵

As the court observed, to establish actual malice requires "sufficient evidence to permit the conclusion that the Defendant, in fact, entertained serious doubts as to the truth of his publication."⁵³⁶ Because the plaintiff's evidence failed to support a finding of actual malice, the court granted summary judgment on both claims.⁵³⁷

In summary, to support a claim for publicity casting plaintiff in a false light under Arkansas law, the plaintiff must establish each of the following elements: (1) damages, (2) publicity by the defendant given to a matter that placed the plaintiff in a false light, (3) publicity pertaining to a matter that would cause a reasonable person to justifiably feel seriously offended and aggrieved, and (4) proximate cause.⁵³⁸ Each of these four elements must be established by a preponderance of the evidence.⁵³⁹ In addition, for public figures, or for publicity relating to a matter of public concern, the plaintiff must prove actual malice by clear and convincing evidence, meaning proof that enables a conclusion without hesitation that the allegation is true.⁵⁴⁰

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

E. Breach of Fiduciary Duty

The Arkansas courts have not expressly held whether a party otherwise aggrieved by an invasion of privacy may have a cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty as an alternative remedy. However, the Arkansas Supreme Court has held on several occasions that a party to a fiduciary relationship may sue another party to that relationship for breach of a duty arising from the nature of the relationship.⁵⁴¹ Unlike a claim for invasion of privacy, breach of fiduciary duty does not require proof of intentional conduct, at least not when self-dealing is alleged.⁵⁴²

Many fiduciary relationships impose a duty of confidentiality.⁵⁴³ But whether or not a breach of a specific duty of confidentiality may give rise to a cause of action by a party aggrieved by the breach remains an open question in Arkansas. Other jurisdictions have held that a breach of a fiduciary's duty of confidentiality may support an action for damages for the resulting harm, including emotional distress.⁵⁴⁴ The Arkansas Supreme Court has recently limited remedies in actions for breach of fiduciary duty; damages for emotional distress unaccompanied by "quantifiable economic loss" are not recoverable.⁵⁴⁵ Nevertheless, breach of fiduciary duty may be a proper basis for recovery for disclosure of confidences, as long as the plaintiff sustains some amount of pecuniary damages to accompany a claim for emotional distress or mental anguish.

F. Remedies

1. Damages

A plaintiff who successfully litigates a common law invasion of privacy claim in Arkansas may recover compensatory damages⁵⁴⁶ for mental anguish and pecuniary loss.⁵⁴⁷ Because all four privacy torts require proof of intent, Arkansas law does not preclude an award of purely economic damages.⁵⁴⁸ Compensatory damages are not presumed; the plaintiff must demonstrate actual damages as an element of the privacy claim.⁵⁴⁹ However, once the evidence establishes that the plaintiff sustained mental anguish, it is for the jury to weigh the plaintiff's feelings that might reasonably follow from the intrusion.⁵⁵⁰ A court will not reverse a jury award of damages unless the amount is "clearly the result of passion or prejudice, or so great as to shock the conscience of the court."⁵⁵¹

The plaintiff may recover damages even if difficult to quantify, and expert testimony is not required.⁵⁵² "Arkansas law has never insisted on exactness of proof in determining damages, and if it is reasonably certain that some loss occurred, it is enough that damages can be stated only approximately."⁵⁵³

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

If the plaintiff secures an award of compensatory damages, punitive damages are also available.⁵⁵⁴ However, nominal damages⁵⁵⁵ will not support an award of punitive damages.⁵⁵⁶ To recover punitive damages for any claim accruing on or after March 25, 2003, the plaintiff must establish by clear and convincing evidence⁵⁵⁷ (1) that the defendant knew or should have known that the conduct would naturally result in harm and nevertheless continued the conduct with malice or reckless disregard as to the consequences, or (2) that the defendant intentionally pursued a course of conduct for the purpose of causing harm.⁵⁵⁸ Assuming evidence is presented, the jury may consider the defendant's financial status in awarding punitive damages.⁵⁵⁹ Any punitive damage award is subject to the limitations of the Due Process Clause of the United States Constitution.⁵⁶⁰ Under the Arkansas statute, punitive damages awards are subject to judicial scrutiny.⁵⁶¹

2. Injunctive Relief

In the early part of the twentieth century, before Arkansas courts recognized privacy torts, it was not uncommon to enjoin conduct that would later support an invasion of privacy claim.⁵⁶² The Arkansas Supreme Court has long since abandoned the common law rule that equitable relief is not available for infringements implicating only personal rights in the absence of property damages, at least if the plaintiff has an inadequate remedy at law.⁵⁶³ The cases are unclear, however, whether equitable relief remains available to prevent disclosure of information pertaining to personal matters. In one case, the Arkansas Supreme Court initially granted the plaintiff a temporary restraining order to prevent disclosure of records but later dissolved it, holding that the specific records in question were not protected under the Arkansas Freedom of Information Act.⁵⁶⁴

Common law relief for invasion of privacy is now well recognized in Arkansas. Nevertheless, if a plaintiff can establish the traditional elements supporting equitable relief, especially if the plaintiff's remedy at law is inadequate or incomplete, the Arkansas courts would likely be amenable.⁵⁶⁵ However, an injunction that prevents publication or otherwise implicates the First Amendment may be subject to challenge as a prior restraint.⁵⁶⁶

G. Defenses

1. Statute of Limitations

A variety of affirmative defenses may be asserted against claims for invasion of privacy. Perhaps the most obvious is the statute of limitations. In Arkansas, because a claim for invasion of privacy is not expressly enumerated in any other statute of limitations, the three-year "catchall" statute of limitations for tort claims generally applies.⁵⁶⁷ However, the Arkansas Supreme Court has applied the one-year limitation period to bar a privacy claim alleging an invasion solely based on two telephone conversations, after declining to decide whether oral communications alone can support a claim for invasion of privacy.⁵⁶⁸ Absent concealment of the wrong or other tolling conduct, the limitation period begins to run when the wrongful act occurs, not when the plaintiff discovers the wrongful nature of the conduct itself.⁵⁶⁹

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

2. Consent

As for other intentional torts, consent is generally an absolute defense to a privacy claim.⁵⁷⁰ For intrusion on seclusion claims, however, the Arkansas Supreme Court has held that consent negates the cause of action, so the plaintiff has the burden of proof to demonstrate that consent was lacking.⁵⁷¹ As defined by the Arkansas Model Jury Instruction for intrusion on seclusion, the plaintiff's burden of proof is particularly daunting. To establish the claim, the plaintiff must prove that the defendant "believed or was substantially certain that [he or she] lacked the necessary legal authority or personal permission, invitation, or valid consent to commit the intrusive act."⁵⁷² The standard appears to require proof of defendant's subjective belief or certainty that consent was lacking; proof of constructive knowledge or objective awareness is not sufficient.⁵⁷³

Scholars have observed that the absence of consent is more accurately described as an element of a privacy claim that the plaintiff must assert and prove.⁵⁷⁴ While the distinction may appear to be academic, treating consent as an affirmative defense eases the pleading burden on the plaintiff⁵⁷⁵ and reduces the risk of a pre-answer dismissal for failure to allege non-consent. Requiring proof of non-consent as an element of the intrusion claim puts the burden on the plaintiff to establish that the defendant's conduct was unauthorized.

Unlike some states' laws,⁵⁷⁶ Arkansas law does not require written or even express consent to avoid liability; consent may be either express or implied by the plaintiff's conduct or inaction.⁵⁷⁷ However, the plaintiff's consent must be voluntary, and it may be limited in scope. Consent is vitiated if the defendant exceeds the scope of the consent granted.⁵⁷⁸ Whether or not the plaintiff consented is an issue of fact for the jury.⁵⁷⁹

3. Qualified and Absolute Privilege

The defenses and privileges applicable to defamation claims apply alike to privacy torts that require publicity as an element, specifically false light and publicity given to private facts.⁵⁸⁰ The corollary to this principle is that those defenses do not bar either misappropriation of name or likeness or intrusion on seclusion, neither of which require publicity or even publication

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

as an element.⁵⁸¹ For example, a defendant who commits an intrusion on seclusion may not assert absolute privilege as a defense on the rationale that the intrusion was necessary to secure evidence to be offered in a pending judicial proceeding.⁵⁸² Whether a qualified privilege exists in a particular context is a question of law.⁵⁸³ But once the court decides that the privilege applies, it is a question of fact whether a particular statement is privileged.⁵⁸⁴

The Arkansas courts have seldom addressed qualified or absolute privileges in the privacy tort context. However, the Arkansas Supreme Court considered a qualified privilege defense in Lee in conjunction with the plaintiff's claims for false light, intrusion, and defamation.⁵⁸⁵ In doing so, the court concisely defined the defense and articulated its parameters:

“A communication is held to be qualifiedly privileged when it is made in good faith upon any subject-matter in which the person making the communication has an interest or in reference to which he has a duty, and to a person having a corresponding interest or duty, although it contains matters which, without such privilege, would be actionable.” [T]he qualified privilege must be exercised in a reasonable manner and for a proper purpose and . . . does not extend to irrelevant defamatory statements that have no relation to the interest entitled to protection. The qualified privilege is lost if it is abused by excessive publication; if the statement is made with malice; or if the statement is made with a lack of grounds for belief in its truthfulness. The question of whether a particular statement falls outside the scope of the qualified privilege for one of these reasons is a question of fact for the jury.⁵⁸⁶

In Lee, the court concluded that the communications in question were not privileged because the defendant's agent who made the challenged statements had no basis for believing they were truthful.⁵⁸⁷ But in Addington, the Arkansas Court of Appeals upheld summary judgment for the defendant in a related claim, holding that the plaintiff failed to overcome the qualified immunity defense with respect to his claims for false light invasion of privacy and defamation.⁵⁸⁸

The general definition of qualified privilege encompasses several more specific variations.⁵⁸⁹ They include the reporter's privilege (sometimes known as the newsworthiness privilege), the fair-report privilege, and the public records privilege. Each of these will be addressed in turn.

a. Reporter's privilege

A defendant is generally entitled to a qualified privilege for communications pertaining to public figures and matters of public concern.⁵⁹⁰ More specifically, First Amendment considerations weigh especially heavily in favor of news publishers and reporters. But unlike some other states' laws,⁵⁹¹ Arkansas law does not recognize absolute or qualified immunity for reporters or news media in defending defamation or privacy claims; nor does it carve out any general exception for “newsworthy” publications.

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

In Williams v. American Broadcasting Cos.,⁵⁹² the federal district court addressed Arkansas substantive law governing news media privileges in the context of a discovery dispute. A patient and her surgeon filed several tort claims against a news broadcaster and its reporter, including giving publicity to private facts, defamation, and false light invasion of privacy.⁵⁹³ The defendants asserted the “reporters’ privilege” in an effort to avoid producing the “out-takes” of videotape footage used in producing a television program.⁵⁹⁴

The court observed that no reporter’s privilege was recognized at common law.⁵⁹⁵ The only reporter’s or newsman’s privilege ever recognized under Arkansas law was based on a statute precluding the required disclosure of a reporter’s sources except under limited circumstances.⁵⁹⁶ But the Arkansas courts have never adopted an expansive interpretation of the statutory privilege, and the federal court in Williams declined to do so, concluding that under Arkansas law, no reporter’s privilege applied to the film “out-takes.”⁵⁹⁷

Turning to the defendant’s argument asserting a constitutionally based privilege, the court cited a United States Supreme Court plurality opinion in acknowledging a limited constitutional basis for protecting newsmen against disclosure of editorial processes.⁵⁹⁸ Yet that limited privilege had to give way when “a member of the press is alleged to have circulated falsehood and is sued for injury to the plaintiff’s reputation,” and the plaintiff seeks evidence material to a “critical element” of the claim.⁵⁹⁹ The court reasoned that any other conclusion would render plaintiffs powerless to prove actual malice as required by New York Times Co. v. Sullivan,⁶⁰⁰ or to prove malice in order to recover punitive damages.⁶⁰¹ The court concluded that the defendant’s constitutional argument was inconsistent with the principle that “malicious libelous utterances are not constitutionally protected.”⁶⁰² Thus, the plaintiff’s motions to compel production were granted.⁶⁰³

No Arkansas court since has cited Williams or otherwise addressed whether a reporter or news organization has a qualified or absolute privilege in the context of a privacy claim. The case has been cited with approval on several occasions by other courts.

b. Fair report privilege

Arkansas defamation law recognizes a privilege for “fair reporting” of an official proceeding or public meeting.⁶⁰⁴ The privilege attaches with respect to the report of a proceeding or meeting, and a defendant is not liable unless the plaintiff establishes that the publication exceeds the scope of the privilege.⁶⁰⁵ The defendant exceeds the scope of the privilege if the published report does not accurately report the substance of the meeting or proceeding, and if the defendant fails to take steps reasonably necessary to insure the accuracy of the publication.⁶⁰⁶ The Arkansas courts have not addressed a privacy claim in which the defendants have asserted the fair report privilege. However, the privilege would certainly apply to an invasion of privacy claim for false light publicity to the same extent it applies to defamation.

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

c. Public records privilege⁶⁰⁷

The Arkansas Freedom of Information Act⁶⁰⁸ generally provides for public access to information contained in “public records,” broadly defined as records “required by law to be kept” or “otherwise kept and which constitute a record of the performance” or nonperformance of “official functions.”⁶⁰⁹ The Arkansas courts have repeatedly and consistently held that the statute is to be liberally interpreted in favor of disclosure.⁶¹⁰

However, just because information is in a public record does not preclude a cause of action for invasion of privacy; nor does it bar assertion of a constitutional, statutory, or common law privacy interest in the information. For one thing, the Act includes a number of exceptions barring access to certain kinds of records.⁶¹¹ Moreover, to the extent that an individual asserts a constitutional or other privacy interest in information contained in public records, the public’s interest in the records must be balanced against the individual privacy interests.⁶¹² As might be expected, an individual’s privacy interest in particular public records and the information they contain varies depending on a number of factors,⁶¹³ including the government’s purpose in maintaining the records and the public’s interest in accessing them.⁶¹⁴

An individual’s criminal history records are almost always exempt from privacy claims, even information pertaining to arrestees who have not been convicted of any offense. The earliest Arkansas case was Mabry v. Kettering.⁶¹⁵ Arrestees sought to preclude federal law enforcement officials from publishing their photographs and distributing them nationwide.⁶¹⁶ Citing a number of cases from other jurisdictions, the court held that law enforcement officers may use photographs of those in custody who have been charged with a crime for the purpose of identifying the accused.⁶¹⁷ Even records pertaining to unsubstantiated and unfounded administrative reports of possible child abuse may not be subject to an individual’s privacy claim if a statute requires the information to be included in a public registry, and if sufficient statutory safeguards are in place to protect the individual’s privacy interests.⁶¹⁸

While the accused may have only a limited privacy interest, if any, in criminal history records, family members of the accused may have a legitimate interest in preventing the release of criminal investigation records implicating matters personal to them. In McCambridge v. City of Little Rock, the court recognized that the plaintiff had a constitutional privacy interest in certain criminal investigation records relating to her son's murder-suicide.⁶¹⁹ But the court also emphasized that the public had a strong interest in having access to records relevant to solving crime.⁶²⁰ In balancing those interests, the court concluded that the public's interest in the records outweighed the mother's constitutional privacy interests.⁶²¹

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

The Arkansas courts have repeatedly held that exceptions to the Arkansas Freedom of Information Act must be narrowly construed.⁶²² The several exceptions to the Act include "[p]ersonnel records to the extent that disclosure would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy[,]""⁶²³ and "[m]edical records, adoption records, and education records as defined in the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act of 1974 . . . unless their disclosure is consistent with the provisions of that [federal] act."⁶²⁴ Both exceptions protect against the disclosure of records that implicate important individual privacy concerns with respect to employment, medical care, family relationships, and educational matters. A full discussion of these exceptions is beyond the scope of this Article. However, each of these two exceptions has been the subject of litigation and considerable public debate.⁶²⁵

4. Other Statutory Defenses

Specific statutes may permit conduct that might otherwise support a claim for invasion of privacy, and therefore may be asserted in defense. For example, a party to a cordless or cell phone communication may record it, even without the knowledge of the other party to the call.⁶²⁶

V. UNRESOLVED ISSUES

Arkansas privacy law has evolved considerably since the Arkansas Supreme Court first recognized the common law right of privacy fifty years ago. The development of the state's right of privacy, grounded both in common law and the Arkansas Constitution, is largely attributable to the courts; the Arkansas General Assembly has taken a relatively low profile in the development of the civil right of privacy. This section identifies legal issues related to the right of privacy that Arkansas policymakers have not yet resolved.

A. Misappropriation of Name or Likeness

While the Arkansas Supreme Court upheld a judgment for misappropriation of name or likeness in Olan Mills, Inc. of Texas v. Dodd,⁶²⁷ no Arkansas appellate court, then or since, has had an opportunity to directly consider this privacy claim. In recognizing other privacy torts, the Arkansas Supreme Court has repeatedly relied on the applicable provisions of the Re-

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers statement (Second) of Torts that define the elements of each claim. Accordingly, the Arkansas Model Jury Instructions generally follow the Restatement definitions.⁶²⁸

Under the Restatement definition, a claim for misappropriation of name or likeness requires proof that the defendant used the plaintiff's name or likeness for the defendant's advantage. As in Olan Mills, in which the defendant used the plaintiff's studio photographs without authorization to advertise its photography services, the cause of action sometimes seeks a remedy for a defendant's commercial use of one's identity. Yet the Restatement explicitly provides that commercial use is not required.⁶²⁹ Some states, like New York, have enacted statutes restricting the cause of action to situations involving commercial use.⁶³⁰ The Arkansas right of privacy, however, is governed by common law alone, and the state courts have never undertaken to limit recovery to situations involving a defendant's commercial use.

In two cases, however, the federal courts have erroneously assumed that the cause of action requires the plaintiff to prove commercial use by the defendant.⁶³¹ To the contrary, the Arkansas Model Jury Instructions adopt the broader definition of the claim as set forth in the Restatement.⁶³² The comment to the model jury instruction muddies the issue by observing that the federal district court "confirmed" that the tort requires commercial use.⁶³³ But no Arkansas court has ever held that appropriation of name or likeness is actionable only if the defendant engages in commercial use of the plaintiff's identity. Nor has the Arkansas General Assembly enacted any statute so limiting the cause of action.

The claim for invasion of privacy by misappropriation of name or likeness is correctly defined in Arkansas Model Jury Instruction 421 to require use for the defendant's advantage, which need not be a commercial one.⁶³⁴

B. The Right of Publicity

In many states, the courts and legislatures have explicitly acknowledged considerable evolution in the common law right to damages for misappropriating one's name or likeness for the defendant's benefit. In the early years, only private individuals could pursue a common law action to redress emotional injury for invasion of privacy. Most courts considered public officials and public figures to have waived any right to privacy, or at least to have implicitly consented to invasions of privacy when they elected to join the public arena.

Beginning in the mid-twentieth century, however, many courts began to acknowledge the property interests of celebrities in protecting the economic value of their public personas.⁶³⁵ The traditional common law right to recover damages for invasion of "privacy" by misappropriation of one's identity thus evolved to what is now better known as the "right of publicity.⁶³⁶ A plaintiff seeking redress for violation of the right of publicity may recover for the economic loss associated with the defendant's use.

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

No court, state or federal, has addressed whether Arkansas recognizes the common law right of publicity.⁶³⁷ In other states, the right of publicity has become such a frequent matter of litigation that several legislatures have enacted specific statutes governing the right.⁶³⁸ Some states treat the right as an expansion of the privacy right against misappropriation of name or likeness, but in fact it redresses a different kind of injury altogether.⁶³⁹ Many courts cite the Restatement (Third) of Unfair Competition⁶⁴⁰ as the basis for the common law right of publicity.⁶⁴¹ Neither the Arkansas General Assembly nor the Arkansas courts have addressed the issue.

C. Descendibility

A related issue is whether a claim for violation of the right of privacy, or any of its variations, survives a plaintiff who dies before securing a judgment awarding damages. Most states recognize privacy as a right personal to the plaintiff.⁶⁴² Like other personal rights, in most states the right does not survive the plaintiff⁶⁴³ and is not heritable unless a state statute preserves the right to the plaintiff's estate.⁶⁴⁴

The issue of descendibility has been litigated frequently over the last decade as the early generations of mass media celebrities pass away, leaving substantial economic value in their surviving public identities. For example, Elvis Presley and Marilyn Monroe have been the subjects of extensive litigation and even legislation addressing the descendibility of the economic value of their celebrity identities.⁶⁴⁵ The premature death of Michael Jackson is another illustration that issues involving descendibility of publicity rights are likely to multiply with future generations of celebrities.⁶⁴⁶

Several states have enacted legislation to address the descendibility issue.⁶⁴⁷ Those state statutes that allow the right of publicity to survive vary widely as to the length of time the right survives the decedent.⁶⁴⁸ Arkansas has yet to address whether claims for invasion of privacy by misappropriation of name or likeness survive the plaintiff.

In Cannady v. St. Vincent Infirmary Medical Center, the Arkansas Supreme Court followed the majority rule against survivability of a claim for intrusion on seclusion,⁶⁴⁹ even though the Arkansas survival statute generally provides that claims for personal injury survive the decedent.⁶⁵⁰ The Cannady court held that the right of privacy is generally personal to the plaintiff and therefore does not survive the plaintiff's death.⁶⁵¹ However, in dicta the court observed that the Restatement makes an exception for privacy claims for misappropriation of name or likeness, at least to the extent that an invasion may implicate a property interest.⁶⁵² Thus the issue remains open with respect to other privacy torts, especially those that implicate economic interests. Cannady decided only that claims for intrusion on seclu-

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

sion, which generally seek a remedy for mental anguish and emotional distress rather than economic loss, do not survive the plaintiff.⁶⁵³

D. Invasion of Privacy by Oral Communications Alone

In Dunlap v. McCarty,⁶⁵⁴ the plaintiffs claimed damages for intrusion on seclusion based on two telephone conversations between the parties. The appellate court reversed a judgment for the plaintiffs and an award of nominal damages on statute of limitations grounds, applying the one-year limitation period applicable to “actions for words spoken whereby special damages are sustained.”⁶⁵⁵ In passing, however, the court expressed skepticism about invasion of privacy claims based solely on oral communications, noting that other state courts were divided on the issue.⁶⁵⁶ The court specifically declined to address “whether mere oral communications can be the basis of a claim for invasion of privacy”⁶⁵⁷ because it was not necessary to reach the issue.

While the court has never revisited the issue, the “oral publication limitation” referenced by the Dunlap court, once recognized by a slim minority of early courts, has been rejected by the great majority as antiquated and lacking rational justification.⁶⁵⁸ The clear consensus of the decisions addressing the issue rejects any such distinction based on the means of communication. For example, several cases in other jurisdictions have considered debt collection practices often involving verbal telephone harassment.⁶⁵⁹ Nevertheless, the issue remains unresolved by the Arkansas courts.

E. False Light Publicity Claims by Private Plaintiffs Not Implicating Matters of Public Concern

Because privacy claims alleging publicity portraying the plaintiff in a false light may implicate First Amendment concerns, the United States Supreme Court has imposed additional requirements on public figures who seek to recover damages and on private persons who seek to recover for false light publicity involving matters of public concern.⁶⁶⁰ Specifically, the Court has held that to recover damages, a public figure must establish that the defendant acted with actual malice.⁶⁶¹ In addition, if the publicity involves a matter of legitimate public concern, the plaintiff must overcome constitutional concerns by meeting a higher burden of proof, although the extent of that burden has not been clearly delineated.⁶⁶²

The issue not yet resolved by the federal courts is whether a private plaintiff must prove actual malice to recover damages for false light invasion of privacy pertaining to a matter not of legitimate public concern.⁶⁶³ At least one scholar has predicted that First Amendment restrictions do not apply to private individuals who allege an invasion of privacy by false light publicity not involving a matter of public interest.⁶⁶⁴ However, the Eighth

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

Circuit, applying Arkansas law, held in 1992 that even a private plaintiff must establish actual malice to recover damages for false light invasion of privacy, even though the publicity did not involve a matter of legitimate public concern.⁶⁶⁵ More recently, the Arkansas Supreme Court expressly left the question open in Lee, pointedly noting that neither party had objected to the jury instructions requiring the private plaintiff to prove actual malice.⁶⁶⁶

F. Scope of Familial and Relational Privacy Rights

Both state and federal courts have acknowledged that the right of privacy implicates familial and relational interests.⁶⁶⁷ For example, in McC Cambridge,⁶⁶⁸ the Arkansas Supreme Court held that the mother of a murder-suicide victim had a constitutional privacy interest in restricting disclosure of certain documents, including a letter her son had written to her before he died.⁶⁶⁹ Similarly, in a federal Freedom of Information Act case, the United States Supreme Court acknowledged that the surviving family members of suicide victim Vince Foster could assert their own privacy interests in seeking to limit public disclosure of photographs of the deceased.⁶⁷⁰ The Court relied in part on the “well-established cultural tradition” acknowledging the family’s right to control the disposition of the remains and to limit the use of photographs of the body, which had “long been recognized at common law.”⁶⁷¹ The Court also emphasized, however, that the privacy interests acknowledged by certain exceptions to the Freedom of Information Act go beyond the common law right of privacy.⁶⁷²

The Arkansas Supreme Court has expressly and repeatedly acknowledged familial and relational privacy interests in recognizing a state constitutional right of privacy.⁶⁷³ The constitutional right protects the privacy of sexual relationships between consenting adult partners,⁶⁷⁴ as well as eligibility to become foster parents regardless of marital status or sexual orientation.⁶⁷⁵ The constitutional privacy interest recently led a divided court to reverse a criminal conviction of a high school teacher for engaging in a consensual sexual relationship with an adult student.⁶⁷⁶ On the other hand, the Arkansas Supreme Court recently rejected a mother’s privacy claim asserting that her own right of privacy was violated when hospital employees violated federal criminal law by viewing photographs of her daughter, the victim of a brutal rape, who later died of injuries inflicted by her assailant.⁶⁷⁷ The court refused to recognize a common law relational privacy interest, rejecting the reasoning of courts in a minority of other states that have allowed recovery in analogous circumstances.⁶⁷⁸

The Arkansas Supreme Court has been progressive in interpreting the state constitution to limit government invasions of relational and familial privacy interests. Yet the court has been much less inclined to recognize common law remedies against nongovernmental defendants for violation of familial and relational privacy interests. It remains to be seen whether the

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

Arkansas Supreme Court will reconcile the two lines of cases, or whether the Arkansas General Assembly will enact legislation to address the issue.

G. Scope of the Arkansas Constitutional Right of Privacy

The most recent privacy law cases issued by the Arkansas Supreme Court illustrate a division among the justices concerning the scope of the fundamental right of privacy implicit in the Arkansas Constitution. In 2002, the court unanimously recognized in Jegley v. Picado that the constitutional right protects consensual sexual relationships between consenting adults, barring prosecution of gay and lesbian couples for violating the Arkansas criminal sodomy statute.⁶⁷⁹ Not long after, the court rejected an argument that mandatory DNA sampling for non-violent felons violated the state constitutional right of privacy.⁶⁸⁰ In dicta, the court distinguished Jegley, suggesting that the state constitutional right to privacy applied only to intimate sexual activity in one's home.⁶⁸¹

In 2006, the court struck down a regulation of the Arkansas Child Welfare Agency Review Board declaring that no person who lives in a household with an adult homosexual may qualify as a foster parent.⁶⁸² The majority declined to reach the privacy issue, reasoning that the Board lacked statutory authority to adopt the regulation because it had not been shown to promote the health, safety, and welfare of children.⁶⁸³ But Justice Brown concurred separately, noting that he would have reached the privacy issue. He reasoned that the regulation violated the constitutional privacy right of prospective foster parents “attending sexual conduct in the bedroom between two consenting adults.”⁶⁸⁴

In 2011, the court unanimously extended the scope of the constitutional right of privacy to protect the right of unmarried cohabiting sexual partners to decide whether to become foster parents.⁶⁸⁵ The unanimous court reasoned that cohabiting sexual partners, whether heterosexual or homosexual, should have the right to decide whether to become parents.⁶⁸⁶ The court struck down Act I because it automatically barred same-sex cohabiting couples from becoming foster parents as a matter of law, even if they otherwise met the qualifying criteria.⁶⁸⁷

The diverging perspectives on the Arkansas Supreme Court regarding the scope of the fundamental privacy right were revealed most clearly in 2012 in Paschal v. State,⁶⁸⁸ in which a slim majority reversed the conviction of a high school teacher for violating an Arkansas statute prohibiting a public schoolteacher from engaging in sexual contact with a student under age twenty-one. The conduct that led to the teacher's prosecution was a consensual relationship with an eighteen-year-old student.⁶⁸⁹ The majority reversed the conviction, holding that the statute was unconstitutional as applied to Paschal.⁶⁹⁰ The three dissenting justices narrowly interpreted the right of privacy grounded in the Arkansas Constitution to protect only “a right to privacy . . . for consenting adults to have sexual relations in the privacy of their homes.”⁶⁹¹ The dissenters would have upheld Paschal’s conviction, reasoning that his conduct indisputably violated the criminal statute and did not implicate the fundamental right of privacy.⁶⁹²

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

In summary, the Arkansas Supreme Court unanimously embraces the principle that the Arkansas Constitution guarantees a fundamental right of privacy with respect to consensual adult sexual relationships. However, the parameters of that right remain unclear, undoubtedly inviting continued litigation.⁶⁹³ It remains to be seen whether a majority of the Arkansas Supreme Court will continue to extend the right to any adult consensual sexual relationship, with a focus on personal autonomy to engage in consensual sexual relationships; or whether the court’s policy focus is to protect the right of cohabiting partners and their families to make personal decisions, in the setting of the home, about how they conduct their daily lives.

H. Private Civil Claims for Invasion of Privacy Based on Violation of Criminal Statutes

Under the Arkansas crime victims civil liability statute,⁶⁹⁴ criminal conduct that would amount to a felony offense under Arkansas law may support a civil cause of action for damages by any person harmed by the defendant’s conduct.⁶⁹⁵ If the person dies, the cause of action survives and may be filed on behalf of the estate.⁶⁹⁶ First enacted in 1997, the crime victims civil liability statute was amended in 2011 to exclude criminal abuse of adults⁶⁹⁷ and Medicaid fraud.⁶⁹⁸ Otherwise, conduct defined by Arkansas law as a felony may be the factual basis for a civil claim, whether or not the offender is prosecuted for the criminal offense. Only a preponderance of the evidence is required to prove each element of the claim, and a prevailing plaintiff may recover attorney fees and costs as well as damages.⁶⁹⁹

To date, no published decision has relied on the crime victims civil liability statute to support a civil claim redressing invasion of privacy. But the Arkansas General Assembly has recently enacted several criminal statutes addressing such privacy-related offenses as identity fraud, computer fraud, breach of privacy, and similar offenses. The elements of these novel criminal offenses may or may not squarely fit within the elements of the four traditional variations on the common law right of privacy. Therefore, the crime victims civil liability statute may offer an alternative basis for asserting a claim for invasion of privacy beyond the four privacy torts recognized by Arkansas common law and the Restatement (Second) of Torts. Moreover, the Arkansas Supreme Court recognizes that a statutory claim and a common law claim seeking damages for the same injury may be asserted in the same action.⁷⁰⁰

Arkansas felony criminal offenses within the scope of the crime victims civil liability statute include voyeurism,⁷⁰¹ video voyeurism,⁷⁰² financial identity fraud,⁷⁰³ stalking,⁷⁰⁴ residential⁷⁰⁵ or commercial burglary,⁷⁰⁶ forgery,⁷⁰⁷ criminal impersonation,⁷⁰⁸ computer fraud,⁷⁰⁹ computer trespass,⁷¹⁰ unlawful acts involving electronic mail,⁷¹¹ and computer password disclosure,⁷¹² among others. Moreover, another Arkansas statute specifically authorizes a civil cause of action for damages, including loss of profits, by any person injured by the commission of certain computer-related crimes, whether or not classified as felony offenses.⁷¹³

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

Arkansas common law has long recognized that a violation of a statute or ordinance may be considered by the factfinder as evidence of negligence.⁷¹⁴ Because invasion of privacy generally has been considered an intentional tort, it is debatable whether this common law rule might be used in support of a claim for invasion of privacy.

A related issue is whether a violation of a federal criminal statute may support a civil claim for invasion of privacy under Arkansas law. For example, in Cannady, three of the hospital's employees pleaded guilty to a criminal violation of HIPAA for unlawfully viewing medical records and photographs of the plaintiff's decedent.⁷¹⁵ Thereafter, the decedent's mother, on her own behalf and on behalf of her daughter's estate, filed suit against the hospital for invasion of privacy and intentional infliction of emotional distress.⁷¹⁶ The Arkansas Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's dismissal of the privacy claims, reasoning that a claim for invasion of privacy does not survive the decedent, and the mother could not assert her own relational privacy claim based on the undeniable violation of the decedent's privacy interests.⁷¹⁷

Because the defendant hospital's employees pleaded guilty to a violation of HIPAA, that criminal conduct might have provided a basis for asserting a claim for invasion of privacy under the crime victims civil liability statute, or perhaps even under common law.⁷¹⁸ Arkansas courts have occasionally allowed a violation of a federal statute or regulation to be considered evidence of negligence.⁷¹⁹ While the Arkansas courts have been lenient in allowing fact finders to consider statutory violations as evidence of negligence, it is unclear whether they would do so in support of a claim for invasion of privacy.⁷²⁰

Thus, aside from the Arkansas statutes expressly authorizing civil claims based upon conduct that would justify criminal prosecution, it remains an open question whether a defendant's violation of a federal or state statute may be considered in support of a tort claim for invasion of privacy.⁷²¹

V. CONCLUSION

From its beginning in the early years of the twentieth century, privacy law has been shaped and influenced by societal norms. As developments in technology continue to enable widespread media publicity, electronic surveillance, and instant global telecommunications, privacy interests and their protections have claimed increasing public attention.

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

Arkansas was a relative latecomer to the field of privacy law, first acknowledging the state common law right of privacy in 1962. In the years since, Arkansas courts have generally interpreted the common law right consistent with the four distinct privacy torts identified and defined by the American Law Institute in the Restatement (Second) of Torts. Forty years after recognizing the common law right, Arkansas was among the first to interpret its state constitution to guarantee a fundamental right of privacy, at least with respect to decision making about intimate consensual adult relationships.

The Arkansas Supreme Court continues to clarify the scope of the state constitutional right, most recently interpreting it to ensure that households with cohabiting unmarried couples are not categorically barred from serving as foster parents.⁷²² Whether the fundamental right of privacy implicit in the Arkansas Constitution extends to informational privacy, procreational decision making, or other privacy interests remains to be seen.

While the Arkansas General Assembly has recently enacted several criminal statutes to address concerns related to informational and computer privacy, it is unclear whether the threat of criminal prosecution will sufficiently deter intrusive conduct. Arkansas statutes authorize civil claims to redress injuries caused by felony violations, but this alternative appears to be seldom used because no cases have reached the appellate courts.

The Arkansas Supreme Court has taken the lead in delineating the progressive state of privacy law in Arkansas. Yet challenging new issues are on the horizon. Recent enactments of the Arkansas General Assembly restricting abortion rights will no doubt test the limits of the state constitutional right of privacy. The United States Supreme Court's recent decision holding the federal statutory definition of marriage unconstitutional as a violation of the Fifth Amendment's Due Process Clause raises important privacy-related issues for Arkansas and other states with respect to defining the traditional institution of marriage. Finally, the new Restatement (Third) of Torts is well underway by the American Law Institute, which may suggest further opportunities for expanding the reach of privacy rights in Arkansas. Twenty years from now, the evolving state of privacy law in Arkansas will no doubt call for yet another update.

* Professor of Law, William H. Bowen School of Law, University of Arkansas at Little Rock. The author expresses appreciation to the William H. Bowen School of Law for providing research support, and to Cassandra Howell for soliciting the Article and for outstanding work as Teaching Assistant from 2011 to 2013. The author also thanks Riley Graber for superb research assistance. Finally, the author acknowledges Max Entrikin for inspiring a lifelong fascination with the right of privacy and for exemplifying the values associated with its protection.

* Please refer to original version with footnotes for accurate page numbers

1. Jegley v. Picado, 349 Ark. 600, 632, 80 S.W.3d 332, 349–50 (2001), quoted with approval in Ark. Dept. Human Servs. v. Cole, 2011 Ark. 145, at 10, 380 S.W.3d 429, 435.

2. John J. Watkins, The Privacy Tort: An Arkansas Guide, 1993 ARK. L. NOTES 91, 91 (1993).

3. See, e.g., Rodolfo Ramirez, Online Impersonation: A New Forum for Crime on the Internet, 27 CRIM. JUST. 6 (Summer 2012).

4. Paul M. Schwartz, Preemption and Privacy, 118 YALE L.J. 902, 904 (2009).

5. RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS §§ 652A–652E (1977); see Schwartz, supra note 4, at 932 (“The classic example of an ALI process for improving state law is the Restatement (Second) of Torts, which sets out Prosser’s privacy torts and heavily influences state law.”); see also id. at 922 (“Overall, the approach in the United States to information privacy law in the private sector has been through sector-specific laws containing FIP’s [fair information practices], which have been enacted by federal and state lawmakers.”).

6. Schwartz, supra note 4, at 905.

7. E.g., Jegley v. Picado, 349 Ark. 600, 641, 80 S.W.3d 332, 356 (2002) (Brown, J., concurring) (“Societal mores change. . . . The unmistakable trend, both nationally and in Arkansas, is to curb government intrusions at the threshold of one’s door and most definitely at the threshold of one’s bedroom.”).

8. Troxel v. Granville, 530 U.S. 57, 68–69 (2000).

9. Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 485–86 (1965).

10. Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558, 578 (2003) (invalidating, as a violation of the Due Process Clause, a Texas statute criminalizing certain intimate sexual conduct between two persons of the same sex), overruling Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986).

The case . . . involve[s] two adults who, with full and mutual consent from each other, engaged in sexual practices common to a homosexual lifestyle. The petitioners are entitled to respect for their private lives. The State cannot demean their existence or control their destiny by making their private sexual conduct a crime. Their right to liberty under the Due Process Clause gives them the full right to engage in their conduct without intervention of the government. . . . The Texas statute furthers no legitimate state interest which can justify its intrusion into the personal and private life of the individual.

Lawrence, 539 U.S. at 578.

11. An example of a federal sectoral privacy statute is the Children’s Online Privacy Protection Act of 1998, which governs the use of personal information about children on the internet. Schwartz, supra note 4, at 924.

12. Pub. L. No. 104-191, 110 Stat. 1936 (1996). For a summary of its key provisions, see OFFICE FOR CIVIL RIGHTS, U.S. DEP’T OF HEALTH & HUMAN SERVS., SUMMARY OF THE HIPAA PRIVACY RULE (May 2003), available at <http://www.hhs.gov/ocr/privacy/hipaa/understanding/summary/privacysummary.pdf>. “A major purpose of the Privacy Rule is to define and limit the circumstances in which an individual’s protected health information may be used or disclosed by covered entities.” Id. at 4.

13. See, e.g., 5 U.S.C. § 552 (2006); ARK. CODE ANN. §§ 25-19-101 to -109 (Repl. 2002 & Supp. 2011).

14. See, e.g., 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6) (excepting “personnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy”); ARK. CODE ANN. § 25-19-105(b)(12) (Supp. 2011) (excepting “[p]ersonnel records to the extent that disclosure would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy”); see also McCambridge v. City of Little Rock, 298 Ark. 219, 230, 766 S.W.2d 909, 914 (1989) (balancing plaintiff’s constitutional privacy interests against public’s interest in open access to criminal investigation records).

15. See, e.g., Lawrence, 539 U.S. at 578; Jegley v. Picado, 349 Ark. 600, 632, 80 S.W.3d 332, 350 (2002).

16. Pub. L. No. 104-199, 110 Stat. 2419 (1996) (codified at 1 U.S.C. § 7 (2006) and 28 U.S.C. § 1738C (2006)), invalidated in part by United States v. Windsor, 133 S. Ct. 2675, 2695 (2013).

17. 1 U.S.C. § 7, invalidated by Windsor, 133 S. Ct. at 2695; see also Ark. Const. amend. 83, § 1 (“Marriage consists only of the union of one man and one woman.”).

18. 28 U.S.C. § 1738C (2006).

19. Windsor, 133 S. Ct. at 2695–96. In a related case, the Court dismissed for lack of standing an appeal from a declaratory judgment that California Proposition 8, which refuses recognition of same-sex marriages, violates the Equal Protection and Due Process Clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment. Hollingsworth v. Perry, 133 S. Ct. 2652, 2660, 2668 (2013).

20. See generally Jeffrey A. Shaman, The Right of Privacy in State Constitutional Law, 37 RUTGERS L. J. 971, 1002–07 (2006) (citing cases). In 1987, for example, the Texas Supreme Court recognized an implied state constitutional right to privacy in striking down a state agency policy requiring employees to take polygraph tests. Tex. Employees Union v. Tex. Dep’t of Mental Health & Mental Retardation, 746 S.W.2d 203, 204 (Tex. 1987). Also in 1987, the Arizona Supreme Court interpreted its state constitutional provision barring intrusions into “private affairs” to preclude interference with the individual right of autonomy to terminate life support. Rasmussen v. Fleming, 741 P.2d 674, 682 (Ariz. 1987). In 1992, the Tennessee Supreme Court held that its state constitution implicitly granted a fundamental right to privacy independent of any rights guaranteed by the United States Constitution. Davis v. Davis, 842 S.W.2d 588, 601 (Tenn. 1992) (holding that right to privacy encompasses procreational autonomy, thus protecting former husband’s right to object to former wife’s proposed donation of frozen embryos to childless couple). These developments in interpreting state constitutions occurred at a time when the United States Supreme Court was becoming increasingly conservative and notably less inclined to expansively interpret the federal Constitution.

21. Jegley v. Picado, 349 Ark. 600, 632, 80 S.W.3d 332, 350 (2002) (“[A] fundamental right to privacy is implicit in the Arkansas Constitution.”). As the Arkansas Supreme Court acknowledged, the Arkansas Constitution does not explicitly guarantee a right to privacy. Id. at 624, 626, 80 S.W.3d at 345, 346. Unlike the Arkansas Constitution, a few other states’ constitutions have been amended to expressly grant a right of privacy. Shaman, supra note 20, at 974–75 (listing Alaska, California, Florida, Hawaii, and Montana); see also Jegley, 349 Ark. at 626, 80 S.W.3d at 346; Daniel J. Solove, A Taxonomy of Privacy, 154 U. PENN. L. REV. 477, 483 & n.25 (2006). For a thoughtful and comprehensive history of the Arkansas Constitution and its amendment and interpretation, see Jerald A. Sharum, Note, Arkansas’s Tradition of Popular Constitutional Activism and the Ascendancy of the Arkansas Supreme Court, 32 U. ARK. LITTLE ROCK L. REV. 33 (2009). As Sharum has observed, the Arkansas Supreme Court has taken an increasingly active role in interpreting the state constitution to confer civil rights broader in scope than those protected by the United States Constitution, perhaps triggered by Arkansas v. Sullivan, 532 U.S. 769 (2001). Sharum, supra, at 80. In Sullivan, the Court reversed a holding of the Arkansas Supreme Court interpreting the United States Constitution to provide more generous protections against pretextual searches than had the U.S. Supreme Court. Sullivan, 532 U.S. at 772. But the Court explicitly held that state courts may interpret their own state constitutions to do so. See id. On remand, the Arkansas Supreme Court reached the same result it had before, but this time by interpreting the Arkansas Constitution’s protection against unreasonable searches and seizures more generously than the counterpart protections in the Fourth Amendment. State v. Sullivan, 348 Ark. 647, 657–58, 74 S.W.3d 215, 222 (2002).

22. Jegley, 349 Ark. at 632, 80 S.W.3d at 350 (striking down the Arkansas sodomy statute, Ark. Code Ann. § 5-14-122 (Repl. 1997) (current version at § 5-14-122 (Supp. 2011)), as applied to private, consensual, noncommercial, same-sex sodomy); see also Paschal v. State, 2012 Ark. 127, at 11–12, 388 S.W.2d 429, 436 (reversing conviction of high school teacher for engaging in a consensual sexual relationship with an 18-year-old student as violating defendant's constitutional right of privacy).

23. See Ark. Dep't. of Human Servs. v. Cole, 2011 Ark. 145, at 26, 380 S.W.3d 429, 443.

24. Arkansas Adoption and Foster Care Act, commonly known as "Act 1" (approved Nov. 4, 2008, effective Jan. 1, 2009) (codified at ARK. CODE ANN. §§ 9-8-301 to -305 (Repl. 2009), invalidated by Cole, 2011 Ark. at 26, 380 S.W.3d at 443).

25. Cole, 2011 Ark. at 26, 380 S.W.3d at 443 (holding ARK. CODE ANN. §§ 9-8-301 to -305 unconstitutional).

26. An exception is the Arkansas Supreme Court's recent decision in Cannady v. St. Vincent Infirmary Med. Ctr., 2012 Ark. 369, ___ S.W.3d ___. See infra notes 361-96 and accompanying text.

27. See, e.g., ARK. CODE ANN. § 4-111-103 (Repl. 2011).

28. See Olan Mills, Inc. of Tex. v. Dodd, 234 Ark. 495, 498, 353 S.W.2d 22, 24 (1962) (dicta).

29. This section is largely drawn from J. Lyn Entrikin, The Right to Be Let Alone: The Kansas Right of Privacy, 53 WASHBURN L.J. ___ (forthcoming 2014).

30. 349 Ark. 600, 80 S.W.3d 332 (2002).

31. RAYMOND WACKS, PRIVACY: A VERY SHORT INTRODUCTION 57, 63 (2010); see FREDERICK S. LANE, AMERICAN PRIVACY: THE 400-YEAR HISTORY OF OUR MOST CONTESTED RIGHT 61-62 (2009) ("'The Right to Privacy' was that rarest of law review articles: a treatise so well reasoned and so compellingly argued that it helped to reshape American legal theory."). While most American states have judicially recognized the right of privacy, "other common law jurisdictions languish in a quagmire of indecision and hesitancy." WACKS, supra, at 63. Underscoring the increasing worldwide interest in privacy rights is the Great Britain controversy about reporters employed by now-defunct News of the World hacking into the voice mail of cell phone users. See James Poniewozik, The Humbling of Rupert Murdoch, TIME MAG., Aug. 8, 2011, at 32. See generally ABA PRIVACY & COMPUTER CRIME COMM., INTERNATIONAL GUIDE TO PRIVACY (Jody R. Westby ed., 2004).

32. See Samuel D. Warren & Louis D. Brandeis, The Right of Privacy, 4 HARV. L. REV. 193, 196 (1890); see also Benjamin C. Bratman, Brandeis and Warren's "The Right of Privacy and the Birth of the Right to Privacy," 69 TENN. L. REV. 623, 624 (2002); Amy Gajda, What If Samuel D. Warren Hadn't Married a Senator's Daughter?: Uncovering the Press Coverage That Led to "The Right to Privacy," 2008 MICH. ST. L. REV. 35, 36.

33. JON L. MILLS, PRIVACY: THE LOST RIGHT 5 (2008) (citing Warren & Brandeis, supra note 32); see also Bratman, supra note 32, at 626; Gajda, supra note 32, at 59-60. See generally MILLS, supra, at 29-35 (describing evolution of increasingly intrusive technology and resulting challenges for protection of personal privacy).

34. See Robert E. Mensel, "Kodakers Lying in Wait": Amateur Photography and the Right of Privacy in New York, 1885-1915, 43 AM. Q. 24, 28 (1991).

35. MICHAEL S. MALONE, THE GUARDIAN OF ALL THINGS: THE EPIC STORY OF HUMAN MEMORY 187-88 (2012). Eastman also originated the advertising slogan, "You Push the Button, We Do the Rest." The Brownie camera, introduced in 1901 and advertised to sell for $1.00, was enormously popular. Id.

36. Dorothy J. Glancy, Privacy and the Other Miss M, 10 N. ILL. U. L. REV. 401, 409-17 (1990) (describing uncontested 1890 injunction secured by renowned comic opera star Marion Manola barring theater manager from distributing flash photographs taken during her performance); see Schuyler v. Curtis, 15 N.Y.S. 787, 789 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. Co. 1891) (reciting facts from Manola v. Stevens & Myers (unpublished) decided by the same court in 1890), aff'd, 19 N.Y.S. 264 (Sup. Ct. Gen. Term 1892).

37. Warren & Brandeis, supra note 32, at 196.

38. Id.

39. WACKS, supra note 31, at 53; see William L. Prosser, The Right of Privacy, 48 CAL. L. REV. 383, 383 (1960).

40. Warren & Brandeis, supra note 32, at 205. Warren and Brandeis drew from Professor Thomas Cooley's treatise, first published in 1878, which sketched the outlines of the general right of "personal immunity" that would later become known more specifically as the right of privacy. Id. "The right to one's person may be said to be a right of complete immunity; to be let alone." THOMAS M. COOLEY, A TREATISE ON THE LAW OF TORTS OR THE WRONGS WHICH ARISE INDEPENDENT OF CONTRACT 29 (2d ed. 1888) (emphasis added), quoted in Henry v. Cherry & Webb, 73 A. 97, 99–100, 109 (R.I. 1909) (declining to judicially recognize right of privacy absent legislative action); see also Barber v. Time, 159 SW.2d 291, 294 (Mo. 1942) ("The basis of the right of privacy is the right to be let alone." (citing THOMAS M. COOLEY, A TREATISE ON THE LAW OF TORTS OR THE WRONGS WHICH ARISE INDEPENDENTLY OF CONTRACT 444, § 135 (4th. ed. 1934))).

41. E.g., Marks v. Jaffa, 26 N.Y.S. 908, 909 (Super. Ct. Spec. Term 1893) (enjoining defendant newspaper editor from publishing photograph of plaintiff actor-law student without his consent); Mackenzie v. Soden Mineral Springs Co., 18 N.Y.S. 240, 240 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. Co. 1891) (granting continuing injunction barring use of plaintiff's name and endorsement on defendants' advertising). But cf. Murray v. Gast Lithographic & Engraving Co., 28 N.Y.S. 271, 271–72 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. Co.) (declining to enjoin unauthorized distribution of photos of plaintiff's infant daughter absent claim to vindicate property rights belonging to plaintiff), aff'd, 31 N.Y.S. 17 (N.Y.C. & Co. Comm. Pleas Ct. 1894); see Schuyler v. Curtis, 42 N.E. 22, 26 (N.Y. 1895) (declining to enjoin defendants from erecting statue of plaintiffs' decedent, a private philanthropist, on grounds that subject of alleged privacy invasion was deceased); see also Atkinson v. John E. Doherty & Co., 80 N.W. 285, 288 (Mich. 1899) ("We are not satisfied that . . . one has a right of action either for damages or to restrain the possessor of a camera from taking a snap shot at the passer-by for his own uses."). Note that the earliest recognition of the right of privacy was by courts sitting in equity. See generally Roberson v. Rochester Folding Box, 64 N.E. 442, 444–47 (N.Y. 1902).

42

43. 64 N.E. 442 (N.Y. 1902) (4-3 opinion) (holding that New York does not recognize common law right of privacy), rev'g 71 N.Y.S. 876 (App. Div. 1901). But see N.Y. CIV. RIGHTS LAW § 51 (enacted 1903) (recognizing civil right of privacy for using one's name or likeness, without written consent, for trade or advertising purposes).

44. Roberson, 64 N.E. at 442. For a fascinating and humorous account of the aftermath of this decision for Ms. Roberson and Chief Judge Parker, who authored the decision (and later ran for public office), see Daniel J. Kornstein, The Roberson Privacy Controversy, The Historical Soc'y of the Courts of the State of N.Y. (Issue 4, 2006), at 3, available at <http://www.courts.state.ny.us/history/pdf/HSNLVol.4.pdf>; see also LANE, supra note 31, at 64–70 (discussing Roberson controversy).

45. Bratman, supra note 32, at 641, 648–50.

46. N.Y. CIV. RIGHTS LAW § 51 (McKinney 2009); see N.Y. LAWS 1903, ch. 132, § 2. The companion criminal statute, § 50, defines the conduct as a misdemeanor. N.Y. CIV. RIGHTS LAW § 50 (McKinney 2009); see N.Y. LAWS 1903, ch. 132, § 1. Section 51 creates a private cause of action for a violation of the criminal statute.

47. E.g., Henry v. Cherry & Webb, 73 A. 97, 99–100, 109 (R.I. 1909) (declining to judicially recognize right of privacy absent legislative action); Yoeckel v. Samonig, 75 N.W.2d 925, 927 (Wis. 1956) (declining to judicially recognize the right because state legislature had recently failed to enact bills that would have done so).

48. Bratman, supra note 32, at 641 (citing Ken Gormley, One Hundred Years of Privacy, 1992 WIS. L. REV. 1335, 1354 n.90). Examples are Virginia (enacted 1904) and Utah (enacted 1909). See Note, The Virginia "Right of Privacy" Statute, 38 VA. L. REV. 117, 117 (1952).

-
49. 50 S.E. 68 (Ga. 1905).
50. Id. at 80–81.
51. Id. at 69–70 (quoting Ga. Civ. Code § 4929 (1895)).
52. Id. at 80–81; see DAVID A. ELDER, PRIVACY TORTS § 1:1, at 1-7 (2002) (nearly all jurisdictions recognize right of privacy).
53. See, e.g., Henry v. Cherry & Webb, 73 A. 97, 108 (R.I. 1909) (refusing to judicially recognize right of privacy, following Roberson v. Rochester Folding Box, 64 N.E. 442 (N.Y. 1902)); Hillman v. Star Publ'g Co., 117 P. 594, 596 (Wash. 1911) (rejecting right of privacy absent legislation outlining parameters). But see, e.g., Pritchett v. Bd. of Comm'rs of Knox Cnty., 85 N.E. 32, 35 (Ind. App. 1908) (following Pavesich); Foster-Milburn Co. v. Chinn, 120 S.W. 364, 366 (Ky. App. 1909) (following Pavesich); Munden v. Harris, 134 S.W. 1076, 1080 (Mo. App. 1911) (following Pavesich).
54. Henry, 73 A. at 109.
55. Mabry v. Kettering, 89 Ark. 551, 551, 117 S.W. 746, 747 (1909) (dissolving temporary restraining order prohibiting federal officers from using photographs of arrestees solely to identify them in various localities where federal offenses charged were allegedly committed). “The complaint . . . present[s] an interesting question concerning what is now termed by modern authorities the ‘right of privacy,’ or the right of an individual to . . . restrain an improper use of his photograph without his consent.” Id., 117 S.W. at 747.
56. Mabry v. Kettering, 92 Ark. 81, 81, 122 S.W. 115, 115–16 (1909) (declining to address alleged common law right of privacy in action to enjoin publication of arrestees’ photographs in “rogues’ gallery” absent allegation of use by law enforcement officers for purposes other than identification).
57. Id., 122 S.W. at 115.
58. Munden, 134 S.W. at 1077. “If a man has a right to his own image as made to appear by his picture, it cannot be appropriated by another against his consent.” Id. at 1078.
59. Vassar Coll. v. Loose-Wiles Biscuit Co., 197 F. 982, 985 (W.D. Mo. 1912) (bill in equity).
60. See id. at 984–85. The federal district court distinguished cases involving private persons suing for invasion of privacy, observing that a public corporate institution depends on publicity to fulfill its role as an institution of higher education. “Where a person is a public character, the right of privacy disappears.” Id. at 985 (citing Corliss v. E.W. Walker Co., 57 F. 434 (D. Mass. 1893)); see id. at 994. Today, the common law right of privacy is generally considered a personal right that does not apply to corporations. RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652I cmt. a (1977); see also West v. Media Gen. Convergence, Inc., 53 S.W.3d 640, 648 (Tenn. 2001) (right to privacy cannot attach to corporations or other business entities).
61. Vassar Coll., 197 F. at 984–85.
62. RESTATEMENT OF TORTS § 867 (1939). “A person who unreasonably and seriously interferes with another's interest in not having his affairs known to others or his likeness exhibited to the public is liable to the other.” Id.
63. Id.
64. Id. § 867 cmt. d.
 [L]iability exists only if the defendant's conduct was such that he should have realized that it would be offensive to persons of ordinary sensibilities. It is only where the intrusion has gone beyond the limits of decency that liability accrues. These limits are exceeded where intimate details of the life of one who has never manifested a desire to have publicity are exposed to the public, or where photographs of a person in an embarrassing pose are surreptitiously taken and published. . . . It is only when the defendant should know that the plaintiff would be justified in feeling seriously hurt by the conduct that a cause of action exists. If these conditions exist, however, the fact that the plaintiff suffered neither pecuniary loss nor physical harm is unimportant.

Id.

65. Id.

66. Hinish v. Meier & Frank Co., 113 P.2d 438, 439–40 (Or. 1941).

67. Id. at 448.

68. Prosser, supra note 39, at 383.

69. Id. at 389.

70. For a concise but accurate delineation of the differences among them, see Williams v. Am. Broad. Cos., Inc., 96 F.R.D. 658, 669 (W.D. Ark. 1983).

Intrusion and disclosure require the invasion of something secret, secluded or private; false light and appropriation do not. Disclosure and false light depend upon publicity while intrusion and appropriation do not. False light requires falsity or fiction while none of the other three do. Appropriation requires a use for defendant's advantage while the other three do not.

Id.

71. Olan Mills, Inc. of Tex. v. Dodd, 234 Ark. 495, 498, 353 S.W.2d 22, 24 (1962) (dicta).

72. Id. at 497 n.1, 353 S.W.2d at 23 n.1. Olan Mills has been cited numerous times as the first case in which the Arkansas Supreme Court recognized the common law right of privacy. E.g., HOWARD W. BRILL & CHRISTIAN H. BRILL, ARKANSAS LAW OF DAMAGES § 33:11, at 639 (5th ed. 2004). However, the defendant in that case did not dispute either the invasion of privacy or plaintiff's lack of consent. Olan Mills, 234 Ark. at 497, 353 S.W.2d at 23. Rather, the defendant appealed only the $2,500 award of damages, arguing the plaintiff could not recover for mental anguish alone in the absence of physical injury. Id. at 498, 353 S.W.2d at 24. The court rejected the argument, analogizing the facts to cases in which the court had upheld damages for mental suffering and humiliation caused by wanton or willful conduct without accompanying physical injury. Id., 353 S.W.2d at 24 (citations omitted). Olan Mills admitted that it had customarily secured written consent before using customers' portraits for advertising purposes, but had failed to do so in this case. Therefore, the court simply concluded that the evidence supported the jury's verdict. Id., 353 S.W.2d at 24.

73. 234 Ark. 495, 498, 353 S.W.2d 22, 24 (1962) (dicta).

74. RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS §§ 652A–652E (1977).

75. See Dodrill v. Ark. Democrat Co., 265 Ark. 628, 638 n.8, 590 S.W.2d 840, 845 n.8 (1979).

76. ELDER, supra note 51, § 1:1. The sole exceptions are Wyoming and North Dakota. Id. But cf. N.Y. CIV. RIGHTS LAW § 51 (McKinney 2009) (narrowly recognizing only misappropriation of name or likeness for trade or advertising purposes).

77. See, e.g., Smith v. St. Paul Guardian Ins. Co., 622 F. Supp. 867, 872 (W.D. Ark. 1985) (dicta) (most forms of invasion of privacy require intent as an element).

78. See Talley v. MFA Mut. Ins. Co., 273 Ark. 269, 274, 620 S.W.2d 260, 263 (1981) (declining to adopt “tort concept that one intends the natural and foreseeable consequences of his acts” for purposes of construing insurance policy exclusion for results of intentional conduct); accord RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 8A (1965) (defining “intent”).

79. Under Arkansas law, “intentional torts involve consequences which the actor believes are substantially certain to follow his actions.” Miller v. Ensco, Inc., 286 Ark. 458, 460, 692 S.W.2d 615, 617 (1985), cited with approval in Baptist Health v. Murphy, 365 Ark. 115, 123, 226 S.W.3d 800, 808 (2006); cf. Angle v. Alexander, 328 Ark. 714, 719–20, 945 S.W.2d 933, 935–36 (1997) (for employee to file tort action against employer for damages in lieu of workers' compensation, employer must have had “desire” to bring about consequences of acts, or must have premeditated the tortious acts with specific intent to injure; intentional torts involve consequences the actor believes are substantially certain to follow from the actions (citing Miller, 286 Ark. at 461–62, 692 S.W.2d at 617–18)).

80. See Ark. R. Civ. P. 8; see also Dunlap v. McCarty, 284 Ark. 5, 7, 678 S.W.2d 361, 363 (1984) (“Simply because the complaint said that the action was one for ‘invasion of privacy’ would not make it so; we must look to the alleged facts.” (citing Bankston v. Pulaski Cnty. Sch. Dist., 281 Ark. 476, 665 S.W.2d 859 (1984))); cf. Steinbuch v. Hachette Book Grp., No. 4:08CV00456 JLH, 2009 WL 963588, at *2 (E.D. Ark. Apr. 8, 2009) (dismissing false light claim for failing to “make any specific allegations as to how the book casts him in a false light”).

81. See Milam v. Bank of Cabot, 327 Ark. 256, 264, 937 S.W.2d 653, 657 (1997) (refusing to develop privacy claim for plaintiffs, who failed to identify which privacy theory applied and cited no authority to support alleged invasion of privacy).

82. Mabry v. Kettering, 89 Ark. 551, 552, 117 S.W. 746, 747 (1909); see Mabry v. Kettering, 92 Ark. 81, 83, 122 S.W. 115, 115 (1909); see also Olan Mills, Inc. of Tex. v. Dodd, 234 Ark. 495, 498, 353 S.W.2d 22, 24 (1962) (dicta).

83. 228 Ark. 289, 307 S.W.2d 80 (1957).

84. Id. at 295–96, 307 S.W.2d at 84.

85. See RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652B (1977); see also ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 420 (Ark. Supreme Court Comm. on Jury Instructions 2013).

86. As a general rule, an equitable remedy is not available unless the plaintiff lacks a complete legal remedy. Townsend v. Ark. State Hwy. Comm’n, 326 Ark. 731, 734, 933 S.W.2d 389, 391 (1994); McGehee v. Mid South Gas Co., 235 Ark. 50, 55, 357 S.W.2d 282, 286 (1962). In Webber, because the Arkansas Supreme Court upheld the injunction in substantial part, the court implicitly held that no common law right of privacy existed in Arkansas at that time. See Webber, 228 Ark. at 295–96, 307 S.W.2d at 84 (“He has no remedy at law against the almost incessant harassment which the record discloses he has been subjected to over a period of years.”).

87. See Webber, 228 Ark. at 293, 307 S.W.2d at 82–83.

For several years appellant has written numerous letters and notes to appellee in an effort to force him to renew their association. These notes and letters, signed and unsigned, were delivered by mail and by the appellant leaving them in or upon appellee’s automobile, his residence and place of business. Similar letters have been written by appellant to appellee’s mother, wife, employer and the real estate company from which appellee purchased his home and, in which, appellant states that appellee is the father of her unborn child and is soon to be faced with a paternity suit. Appellee estimated that he had received at least 200 such communications within a year prior to the last hearing.

[A]ppellant caused a picture of herself and the announcement of their approaching marriage to be published in a local newspaper. [S]he made written application for a marriage license in their names . . . without his knowledge or consent. Almost daily appellant accosts appellee on the streets in an attempt to engage him in conversation. Since appellee’s marriage . . . , appellant has followed appellee and his wife to town in her car nearly every work day and left a note or letter in or upon his car when he refused to talk to her. On numerous occasions she has parked her car within a few feet of appellee’s home for long periods. The telephone at appellee’s home rings frequently when the caller merely ‘hangs up’ upon answer being made.

Id. at 292, 307 S.W.2d at 82. Upholding the injunction even though the rights implicated were not property rights, the court concluded, “The acts of the appellant . . . might be classed as trivial if they had been merely sporadic or of short duration. But appellee has the right to pursue his lawful daily occupation and family activities unhampered by the protracted molestations of the appellant . . .” Id. at 293, 307 S.W.2d at 84.

88. 234 Ark. 495, 498–99, 353 S.W.2d 22, 24 (1962).

89. Id., 353 S.W.2d at 24.

-
90. Id., 353 S.W.2d at 24.
91. 265 Ark. 628, 590 S.W.2d 840 (1979).
92. Id. at 637–38 & n.8, 590 S.W.2d at 844–45 & n.8.
93. Id. at 631, 590 S.W.2d at 841; see In re Dodrill, 260 Ark. 223, 538 S.W.2d 549 (1976).
94. Dodrill, 265 Ark. at 633, 590 S.W.2d at 842. The trial court granted summary judgment on both claims, reasoning that the attorney plaintiff was a public figure and that he failed to show that the newspaper acted with actual malice. Id. at 633–34, 590 S.W.2d at 842. The Arkansas Supreme Court affirmed this holding on appeal. Id. at 639–40, 590 S.W.2d at 846.
95. Id. at 637–38, 590 S.W.2d at 844–45; see id. at 638 n.8, 590 S.W.2d at 845 n.8 (holding that “Arkansas has been included in [the] majority [of jurisdictions that recognize the right of privacy] with the decision in Olan Mills . . .”).
96. E.g., Milam v. Bank of Cabot, 327 Ark. 256, 263, 937 S.W.2d 653, 657 (1997) (citations omitted) (“Arkansas has recognized the existence of four actionable forms of invasion of privacy . . .”); CBM of Cent. Ark. v. Bemel, 274 Ark. 223, 225–26, 623 S.W.2d 518, 519–20 (1981) (recognizing intrusion on seclusion); Dodrill, 265 Ark. at 638, 590 S.W.2d at 845 (recognizing false light publicity); see ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 421 (Ark. Supreme Court Comm. on Jury Instructions 2013) (appropriation of name or likeness) (citing Olan Mills Inc. of Tex. v. Dodd, 234 Ark. 495, 353 S.W.2d 22 (1962)); ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 422 (public disclosure of private facts); see also Wood v. Nat’l Computer Sys., 814 F.2d 544, 545 (8th Cir. 1987) (applying Arkansas law) (publicity given to private facts); Stanley v. Gen. Media Comm’ns, 149 F. Supp. 2d 701, 706–07 (W.D. Ark. 2001) (appropriation of likeness; false light).
97. See, e.g., Cannady v. St. Vincent Infirmary Med. Ctr., 2012 Ark. 369, ___ S.W.3d ___ (intrusion on seclusion); Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Lee, 348 Ark. 707, 74 S.W.3d 634 (2002) (intrusion on seclusion, false light); Dunlap v. McCarty, 284 Ark. 5, 678 S.W.2d 361 (1984) (intrusion on seclusion); Bemel, 274 Ark. 223, 623 S.W.2d 518 (intrusion on seclusion); Dodrill, 265 Ark. 628, 590 S.W.2d 840 (false light); Coombs v. J.B. Hunt Transp., Inc., 2012 Ark. App. 24, 388 S.W.3d 456 (2012) (intrusion on seclusion); Addington v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 81 Ark. App. 441, 105 S.W.3d 369 (2003) (intrusion on seclusion, false light).
98. See Wood, 814 F.2d 544; Dunbar v. Cox Health Alliance, 446 B.R. 306 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 2011).
99. 162 Ark. 567, 258 S.W. 388 (1924).
100. Id. at 568–69, 258 S.W. at 389 (quoting Fort Smith city ordinance).
101. Id., 258 S.W. at 389.
102. Id. at 573, 258 S.W. at 390.
103. Id., 258 S.W. at 390.
104. Id., 258 S.W. at 390.
105. Coker, 162 Ark. at 573, 258 S.W. at 390.
106. Id. at 571–72, 258 S.W. at 390; see Ex parte Smith, 36 S.W. 628, 629 (Mo. 1896) (“We deny the power of any legislative body in this country to choose for our citizens whom their associates shall be.”); Ex parte Cannon, 250 S.W. 429, 430 (Tex. Crim. App. 1923) (“[T]he various subdivisions of section 2 of this ordinance . . . demonstrate that it is violative of the fundamental guaranty of both the federal and state Constitutions to every citizen of life, liberty, and property.”).
107. 255 Ark. 225, 500 S.W.2d 368 (1973).
108. ARK. CODE ANN. § 41-813 (Repl. 1964), invalidated by Jegley v. Picado, 349 Ark. 600, 80 S.W.3d 332 (2002).
109. Carter, 255 Ark. at 227, 500 S.W.2d at 370.
110. Id., 500 S.W.2d at 370.

111. Id., 500 S.W.2d at 370.

112. Id. at 228, 500 S.W.2d at 370 (citations omitted). “[I]f such a statute were in violation of federal constitutional principles, surely the thought would have long since occurred to the many legal scholars and jurists of this state. Appellants have not, by their multifaceted attack, met their very heavy burden of showing that this statute is unconstitutional.” Id., 500 S.W.2d at 370.

113. Id., 500 S.W.2d at 370. The court could have avoided the constitutional issue entirely simply by holding that even if the appellants did have a right of privacy, they had waived it by virtue of engaging in prohibited conduct in a public place in view of others.

114. Id. at 230, 500 S.W.2d at 371.

115. Carter, 255 Ark. at 230, 500 S.W.2d at 371.

116. 262 Ark. 718, 723–24, 561 S.W.2d 281, 284 (1978).

117. ARK. R. CRIM. P. 8.1.

118. Bolden, 262 Ark. at 724, 561 S.W.2d at 284.

119. Id., 561 S.W.2d at 284. As the court observed,

Rule 8.1 is designed and has as its purpose to afford an arrestee protection against unfounded invasion of liberty and privacy. Moreover, the person under arrest taken before a judicial officer without unnecessary delay will have the charges explained, will be advised of his constitutional rights and will have counsel appointed for him, if an indigent, and arrangements for bail can be made expeditiously. Such action may avoid the loss of the suspect's job and eliminate the prospect of the loss of income and the disruption and impairment of his family relationship. Indeed, these are basic and fundamental rights which our state and federal constitutions secure to every arrestee. Hence, we conclude that Rule 8.1 is mandatory in its scope.

Id., 561 S.W.2d at 284 (emphasis added).

120. 298 Ark. 219, 766 S.W.2d 909 (1989).

121. Id. at 224–25, 766 S.W.2d at 911; see Archive of Obituary of Mercedes McCambridge, N.Y. TIMES, Mar. 18, 2004, <http://www.nytimes.com/2004/03/18/arts/mercedes-mccambridge-87-actress-known-for-strong-roles.html>.

122. McCambridge, 298 Ark. at 224–25, 766 S.W.2d at 911.

123. Id. at 225, 766 S.W.2d at 911.

124. Id. at 226, 766 S.W.2d at 912.

125. Id. at 228–30, 766 S.W.2d at 913–14 (citing Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 589, 598–600 (1977) (holding that one facet of constitutional privacy interests includes the right of an individual not to have his private affairs made public)).

126. Id. at 230, 766 S.W.2d at 914 (citing Nixon v. Admin. of Gen. Servs., 433 U.S. 425, 458 (1977); Paul v. Davis, 424 U.S. 693, 713 (1976)).

127. Id. at 231–32, 766 S.W.2d at 915.

128. McCambridge, 298 Ark. at 230, 766 S.W.2d at 914 (citing with approval Bruce E. Falby, Comment, A Constitutional Right to Avoid Disclosure of Personal Matter: Perfecting Privacy Analysis in J.P. v. DeSanti, 653 F.2d 1080 (6th Cir. 1981), 71 GEO. L.J. 219, 240 (1981)).

129. Id., 766 S.W.2d at 914. In particular, she had a privacy interest in two letters Markle had written to his attorney, in Markle's diary, in the letter Markle had written to her, and in the photographs. Id., 766 S.W.2d at 914.

130. Id. at 231, 766 S.W.2d at 915 (citing Nixon, 433 U.S. at 458).

131. Id. at 231–32, 766 S.W.2d at 915.

132. Id. at 232, 766 S.W.2d at 915.

133. Id., 766 S.W.2d at 915.

134. McCambridge, 298 Ark. at 232, 766 S.W.2d at 915.

135. Id. at 230, 766 S.W.2d at 914.

-
136. 429 U.S. 589 (1977).
137. McCambridge, 298 Ark. at 229, 766 S.W.2d at 913 (quoting Whalen, 429 U.S. at 599–600).
138. 349 Ark. 600, 80 S.W.3d 332 (2002).
139. 312 Ark. 206, 848 S.W.2d 927 (1993).
140. Id. at 208, 848 S.W.2d at 928.
141. Id., 848 S.W.2d at 928.
142. Id. at 208–09, 848 S.W.2d at 928.
143. ARK. CODE ANN. § 12-12-505 (Supp. 1991) (repealed 2009).
144. Id.
145. Heath, 312 Ark. at 209, 848 S.W.2d at 928.
146. Id., 848 S.W.2d at 928. The circuit court held in part that retaining the record in the registry would violate Heath’s due process rights. Ark. Dep’t of Human Servs. v. Heath, 307 Ark. 147, 148, 817 S.W.2d 885, 886 (1991). On appeal, the Arkansas Supreme Court did not specify whether it resolved the issue on state or federal constitutional grounds. See Heath, 312 Ark. at 209, 848 S.W.2d at 928.
147. Heath, 312 Ark. at 209, 848 S.W.2d at 928.
148. Id. at 211–14, 848 S.W.2d at 929–31 (citing Paul v. Davis, 424 U.S. 693 (1976)).
149. Id. at 214, 848 S.W.2d at 931.
150. Id. at 215, 848 S.W.2d at 932 (citing ARK. CODE ANN. § 12-12-506 (Supp. 1991) (repealed 2009)).
151. Id. at 215–16, 848 S.W.2d at 931–32.
152. Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 589, 605 (1977) (declining to address privacy issue because challenged state statutory scheme evidenced proper concern with individual privacy interests); Wade v. Goodwin, 843 F.2d 1150, 1153 (8th Cir. 1988) (observing that the “constitutional right to privacy is generally limited to only the most intimate aspects of human affairs”).
153. 349 Ark. 600, 80 S.W.3d 332 (2002).
154. ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-14-122 (Repl. 1997) (current version at § 5-14-122 (Supp. 2011)).
155. Jegley, 349 Ark. at 632, 638, 80 S.W.3d at 350, 354.
156. Id. at 608, 80 S.W.3d at 334.
157. Id. at 624, 80 S.W.3d at 344.
158. Id. at 632, 80 S.W.3d at 350 (Imber, J., writing for the majority). A concurring justice agreed but in narrower language: “I agree with the majority that the right to privacy is a fundamental right under the Arkansas Constitution and that it is violated by enforcement of the sodomy statute against consenting adults engaged in noncommercial sexual activity in the bedroom of their homes.” Id. at 640, 80 S.W.3d at 355 (Brown, J., concurring) (emphasis added). The distinction between all consensual sexual activity between adults and that occurring “in the bedroom of their homes” would later cause Justice Brown to dissent from a decision extending Jegley to protect consensual adult sexual activity outside a couple’s own bedroom. See infra notes 219–31 and accompanying text (discussing Paschal v. State, 2012 Ark. 127, 388 S.W.3d 429).
159. Jegley, 349 Ark. at 628, 80 S.W.3d at 347 (citing Coker v. City of Ft. Smith, 162 Ark. 567, 258 S.W. 388 (1924)).
160. See id., 80 S.W.3d at 347 (quoting ARK. CONST. art. II, §§ 3, 18).
161. See Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986), overruled by Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558 (2003).
162. Lawrence, 539 U.S. at 578.
Th[is] case . . . involve[s] two adults who, with full and mutual consent from each other, engaged in sexual practices common to a homosexual lifestyle. The petitioners are entitled to respect for their private lives. The State [of Texas] cannot demean their existence or control their destiny by making their private sexual conduct a crime [of sodomy]. Their right to liberty under the Due Process Clause gives them the full right to engage in their conduct without intervention of the government.

Id.

163. 360 Ark. 317, 201 S.W.3d 406 (2005).

164. Id., 201 S.W.3d 406.

165. ARK. CODE ANN. §§ 12-12-1101 to -1120 (Repl. 2009).

166. Id. §§ 12-121-1103(9) to -1109(a).

167. Polston, 360 Ark. at 322, 201 S.W.3d at 407.

168. Id. at 326, 201 S.W.3d at 410 (citing Hudson v. Palmer, 468 U.S. 517, 530 (1984)).

169. Id., 201 S.W.3d at 410–11 (citing, e.g., Winston v. Lee, 470 U.S. 753, 762 (1985)).

170. Id. at 327, 201 S.W.3d at 411.

171. Id. at 331, 201 S.W.3d at 414.

172. Id. at 331–32, 201 S.W.3d at 414. “We fail to see how our precedents recognizing a citizen’s fundamental right to privacy in his or her home offer any support for Polston’s argument that he, a convicted felon, has a fundamental right to privacy implicit in Arkansas law that would exempt him from the DNA testing at issue in this case.” Id. at 332, 201 S.W.3d at 414.

173. ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-14-126(a)(1)(B) (Repl. 2006) (current version at § 5-14-126(a)(1)(C)). The statute prohibits “a member of the clergy [who] is in a position of trust or authority over the victim [from using] the position of trust or authority to engage in sexual intercourse or deviate sexual activity.” Id.

174. Talbert v. State, 367 Ark. 262, 239 S.W.3d 504 (2006).

175. Id., 239 S.W.3d 504.

176. Id. at 265, 239 S.W.3d at 508 (citing ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-14-126(a)(1)(B)).

177. ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-14-126(b).

178. 539 U.S. 558, 578 (2003).

179. Talbert, 367 Ark. at 269–71, 239 S.W.3d at 511–12.

180. Id. at 270, 239 S.W.3d at 512.

181. Id., 239 S.W.3d at 512 (emphasis added).

182. 367 Ark. 55, 238 S.W.3d 1 (2006).

183. Howard, 367 Ark. at 58, 238 S.W.3d at 3.

184. ARK. CODE ANN. § 9-28-405 (Supp. 2011).

185. Howard, 367 Ark. at 62, 238 S.W.3d at 6.

186. Id. at 66, 238 S.W.3d at 8–9.

187. Id. at 66–70, 238 S.W.3d at 9–11 (Brown, J., concurring).

188. Id. at 68, 238 S.W.3d at 10 (citing Jegley v. Picado, 349 Ark. 600, 80 S.W.3d 332 (2002)).

189. Id. at 70, 238 S.W.3d at 11.

190. 2011 Ark. 145, 380 S.W.3d 429. See infra notes 203–17 and accompanying text.

191. 465 F.3d 851 (8th Cir. 2006).

192. Id. at 852.

193. Id.

194. Id.

195. Id. at 854–55.

196. Id. at 852–55.

197. Fogley, 465 F.3d at 860.

198. The court acknowledged that “police officers generally have a right of privacy in their private sexual relations.” Id. at 858 n.6 (citing cases from other circuits). But the court also observed that the courts did not agree on the appropriate standard of constitutional review when those activities are investigated by police departments. Id.

199. Id. at 857.

200. Id. at 857–58 (citing Jegley v. Picado, 349 Ark. 600, 632, 80 S.W.3d 332, 350 (2002)). The court also observed that unlike the Arkansas Supreme Court in Jegley v. Picado, the United States Supreme Court in Lawrence v. Texas had implicitly applied a rational-basis standard, suggesting that the constitutional right to engage in consensual homosexual sexual conduct was not a fundamental right. Id. at 857 (citing Lawrence, 539 U.S. at 578).

201. “First, we conclude that a police force has a compelling interest in precluding a criminal investigator from having sexual relations with witnesses or victims involved in an underlying criminal investigation.” Fogley, 465 F.3d at 859.

202. “Second, we conclude that the [Arkansas State Police’s] investigation of [the] allegations was narrowly tailored to serve the state’s compelling interest in administering a fair and unbiased criminal-justice system.” Id. at 860.

203. Id.

204. Ark. Dep’t of Human Servs. v. Cole, 2011 Ark. 145, 380 S.W.3d 429.

205. Id. at 2, 380 S.W.3d at 431.

206. ARK. CODE ANN. § 9-8-304(a) (Repl. 2009).

207. Id. § 9-8-304(b).

208. Cole, 2011 Ark. at 3, 380 S.W.3d at 432.

209. Id. at 4, 380 S.W.3d at 432.

210. Id. at 5–6, 380 S.W.3d at 432–33.

211. Id. at 6–7, 380 S.W.3d at 433 (quoting unpublished circuit court opinion).

212. Id. at 25–26, 380 S.W.3d at 442.

213. Id. at 21, 380 S.W.3d at 440.

214. Cole, 2011 Ark. at 18, 380 S.W.3d at 439.

215. Id., 380 S.W.3d at 439.

216. Id. at 21, 380 S.W.3d at 440.

217. Id. at 9–11, 14–15, 380 S.W.3d at 434–35, 437.

218. See id., 380 S.W.3d at 434–35, 437.

219. See Paschal v. State, 2012 Ark. 127, 388 S.W.3d 429.

220. 2012 Ark. 127, 388 S.W.3d 429 (4-3 opinion).

221. Id. at 1, 388 S.W.3d at 431.

222. The state did not dispute that the sexual relationship was consensual or that the student was an adult for the duration of the relationship. Id. at 8, 388 S.W.3d at 434; see ARK. CODE ANN. § 9-25-101(a) (Repl. 2009) (defining anyone age 18 to have reached the age of majority for all purposes).

223. Paschal, 2012 Ark. at 8, 388 S.W.3d at 434 (quoting ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-14-125(a)(6) (Supp. 2011)).

224. Id. at 14–15, 388 S.W.3d at 437 (Hannah, C.J., writing for the majority). Justice Daniel wrote a separate opinion concurring with the majority opinion to the extent it reversed the sexual assault convictions. However, he also would have reversed the conviction for witness bribery for reasons beyond the scope of this Article. See id. at 15–17, 388 S.W.3d at 438–39 (Danielson, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part).

225. Id. at 11, 388 S.W.3d at 435 (majority opinion) (emphasis added) (quoting Jegley v. Picado, 349 Ark. 600, 632, 80 S.W.3d 332, 350 (2002)).

226. Id. at 11–12, 388 S.W.3d at 436. The majority recognized the possibility that the Arkansas General Assembly may have intended the statute to mean that a high school teacher is inherently in a position of trust and authority over all students, even adults, but the court observed that the legislature had not done so. Id. at 11, 388 S.W.3d at 436 (implicitly distinguishing Talbert v. State, 349 Ark. 600, 239 S.W.3d 504 (2002), in which the court upheld a conviction of a clergyman who had engaged in unwanted sexual activity with two victims by abusing his position of trust and authority).

227. Id. at 17–23, 388 S.W.3d at 439–42 (Brown, J., joined by Gunter & Baker, JJ., dissenting in part and concurring in part); see also id. at 23–26, 388 S.W.3d at 442–43 (Baker, J., joined by Brown & Gunter, JJ., dissenting in part and concurring in part).

228. Id. at 19, 388 S.W.3d at 440 (Brown, J., dissenting in part and concurring in part) (emphasis added) (citing Ark. Dep’t of Human Servs. v. Cole, 2011 Ark. 145, at 14, 380 S.W.3d 429, 437).

229. Paschal, 2012 Ark. at 24, 388 S.W.3d at 442 (Baker, J., dissenting in part and concurring in part).

230. Id. at 25–26, 388 S.W.3d at 443.

231. Id. at 26, 388 S.W.3d at 443.

232. Id., 388 S.W.3d at 443.

233. 234 Ark. 495, 353 S.W.2d 22 (1962).

234. Id. at 498–99, 353 S.W.2d at 24.

235. Id. at 499, 353 S.W.2d at 24.

236. Id. at 498, 353 S.W.2d at 24.

237. See id., 353 S.W.2d at 24.

238. See M.B.M. Co. v. Counce, 268 Ark. 269, 596 S.W.2d 681 (1980).

239. Id. at 274–77, 596 S.W.2d at 684–86.

240. Id. at 279, 596 S.W.2d at 687. Ultimately, the court squarely adopted the common law cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress, thereby “abandon[ing] [its] strained efforts to find a tort or a theoretical physical impact or injury and the consequent tenuous reasoning in order to justify the award of damages for mental anguish.” Id. at 279–80, 596 S.W.2d at 687.

241. In 1992, the federal courts addressed a case involving what appears to have been a classic case of appropriation of likeness. See Peoples Bank & Trust Co. of Mountain Home v. Globe Int’l, Inc., 786 F. Supp. 791 (W.D. Ark.), aff’d in part sub nom. Peoples Bank & Trust Co. of Mountain Home v. Globe Int’l Publ’g, Inc., 978 F.2d 1065 (8th Cir. 1992), modified on remand sub nom. Mitchell v. Globe Int’l Publ’g, Inc., 817 F. Supp. 72 (W.D. Ark. 1993). A 96-year-old woman’s photograph was used without her consent by the defendant publisher to accompany a fictitious story in a supermarket tabloid with the headline, “Pregnancy forces granny to quit work at age 101.” Id. at 792. A decade earlier, the same tabloid had published a “fairly accurate account” of the plaintiff using the same photograph, which it had purchased from a local newspaper. People’s Bank, 978 F.2d at 1069. While the facts appear to have clearly supported a claim for commercial appropriation of the plaintiff’s likeness, the case went to trial and the Eighth Circuit affirmed on a false light invasion of privacy theory. Id. at 1070. For a discussion of the case in the context of false light, see infra notes 502–14 and accompanying text.

242. 149 F. Supp. 2d 701 (W.D. Ark. 2001).

243. Id. at 704. The plaintiffs had voluntarily participated in the contest to determine who, while blindfolded, could most quickly unwrap and fit a condom on a white plastic phallus. Id.

244. Id. The false light claim was dismissed because the plaintiffs admitted that the photograph was accurate, and the court reasoned that the text accompanying the photo could not reasonably be interpreted as a false statement of fact. Id. at 707.

245. Id. at 706 (citing RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652(c) [sic] cmt. (1977)).

246. Stanley, 149 F. Supp. at 706 (citing Fredrickson v. Hustler Mag., 607 F. Supp. 1341, 1360 (N.D. Tex. 1985)).

247. Id. (citing Olan Mills, Inc. of Tex. v. Dodd, 234 Ark. 495, 353 S.W.2d 22 (1962), without a specific pinpoint reference).

248. Id. at 706–07.

249. Id. at 706 (citing Fredrickson, 607 F. Supp. at 1360).

250. Id.

251. Id. at 706–07.

252. See RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652C & cmt. b (1977).

253. Id.; see also ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 421 (Ark. Supreme Court Comm. on Jury Instructions 2013) (“Fourth, that [defendant]’s use of [plaintiff]’s [name][or][likeness] was for [defendant]’s own purposes or benefit, commercial or otherwise”) (emphasis added). But see id. cmt. (citing Stanley, 149 F. Supp. 2d at 706, as having “confirmed” that the tort requires commercial use of the plaintiff’s name or likeness).

254. See RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652C cmt. b (plaintiff may recover “even though the use is not a commercial one, and even though the benefit sought to be obtained is not a pecuniary one”); ELDER, supra note 51, § 6:3 (citing a host of cases allowing recovery for appropriation of name or likeness for noncommercial uses). Only in a very limited number of states like New York, which does not recognize a common law privacy cause of action but has enacted a restrictive statutory cause of action for misappropriation, do the cases restrict recovery to commercial uses only. ELDER, supra note 51, § 6:3 (text accompanying note 16).

255. 776 F. Supp. 2d 886, 899 (E.D. Ark. 2011).

256. Id. at 893, 894.

257. Id. at 899 (citing Stanley v. Gen. Media Commc’ns, Inc., 149 F. Supp. 2d 701, 706 (W.D. Ark. 2001)).

258. See Olan Mills, Inc. of Tex. v. Dodd, 234 Ark. 495, 496, 353 S.W.2d 22, 23 (1962).

259. Id. at 498, 353 S.W.2d at 24.

260. Id. at 498–99, 353 S.W.2d at 24.

261. E.g., Doddrill v. Ark. Democrat Co., 265 Ark. 628, 636–38 & n.8, 590 S.W.2d 840, 844–45 & n.8 (1979); see ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 421 cmt. (Ark. Supreme Court Comm. on Jury Instructions 2013) (citing Dunlap v. McCarty, 284 Ark. 5, 9, 678 S.W.2d 361, 364 (1984), in support of the Restatement definition).

262. See RESTATEMENT SECOND OF TORTS § 652C (1977). But see HOWARD W. BRILL & CHRISTIAN H. BRILL, ARKANSAS LAW OF DAMAGES § 33:11, at 639 (5th ed. 2004) (“The tort of appropriation is limited to instances of commercial use of a person’s name or likeness.” (citing Stanley, 149 F. Supp. 2d at 701)).

263. See ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 421.

264. Id.

265. Id.

266. Id.

267. Id.

268. Id.

269. See generally 1 J. THOMAS MCCARTHY, THE RIGHTS OF PUBLICITY AND PRIVACY 2D §§ 1:1–1:7 (2012).

270. See generally Rashauna A. Norment, Post-Mortem Right of Publicity in Arkansas: Protecting Against the Unauthorized Use of a Person’s Identity for Commercial Purposes, 34 U. ARK. LITTLE ROCK L. REV. 507 (2012) (advocating that Arkansas adopt a post-mortem right of publicity).

271. See infra Part V.B. and accompanying notes.

272. See supra note 96 and accompanying text.

273. 274 Ark. 223, 623 S.W.2d 518 (1981).

274. Id. at 224, 623 S.W.2d at 519.

275. Id., 623 S.W.2d at 519.

276. Id., 623 S.W.2d at 519.

277. Id. at 225, 623 S.W.2d at 519.

278. Id. at 224, 623 S.W.2d at 519.

279. Bemel, 274 Ark. at 224, 623 S.W.2d at 519.

280. Id. at 225–26, 623 S.W.2d at 519–20. The court observed that it had “recognized such a cause of action in Olan Mills.” Id. at 225, 623 S.W.2d at 519. In that case, however, the court merely referenced section 867 of the 1939 Restatement, which then recognized a general claim for invasion of privacy, including “unauthorized publication of a person who is not in public life.” Olan Mills, Inc. of Tex. v. Dodd, 234 Ark. 495, 497–98 & n.1, 353 S.W.2d at 23–24 & n.1 (1962). The Olan Mills court did not recognize a claim for intrusion on seclusion. Nor did it expressly hold that Arkansas recognizes a claim for invasion of privacy or even misappropriation of likeness, except to the extent the court upheld the jury’s damage award on appeal. See id.

281. Bemel, 274 Ark. at 225–26, 623 S.W.2d at 519–20.

“There is likewise no liability unless the interference with the plaintiff’s seclusion is a substantial one, of a kind that would be highly offensive to the ordinary reasonable man, as a result of conduct to which the reasonable man would strongly object. . . . It is only when the telephone calls are repeated with such persistence and frequency as to amount to a course of hounding the plaintiff, that becomes a substantial burden to his existence, that his privacy is invaded.”

Id. (quoting RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652B cmt. d (1977)).

282. 284 Ark. 5, 678 S.W.2d 361 (1984).

283. Id. at 6, 678 S.W.2d at 362.

284. Id., 678 S.W.2d at 362.

285. Id., 678 S.W.2d at 362.

286. Id. at 9, 678 S.W.2d at 364.

287. Id., 678 S.W.2d at 364 (citing RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652B cmt. b, illus. (1977)).

288. Dunlap, 284 Ark. at 9–10, 678 S.W.2d at 364 (citations omitted); see ELDER, supra note 51, § 1:2.

289. Dunlap, 284 Ark. at 10, 678 S.W.2d at 364. The court has not resolved the issue since first acknowledging it in Dunlap. See ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 421 cmt. (2012) (citing Dunlap in observing that the court has expressly declined to resolve the issue).

290. Dunlap, 284 Ark. at 10, 678 S.W.2d at 364. The court had earlier characterized Bemel as a “case of harassment by a bill collector and a classic case of invasion of privacy.” Id. at 9, 678 S.W.2d at 364 (citing Bemel, 274 Ark. 223, 623 S.W.2d 518). While the court downplayed the conduct in this case as dissimilar from a classic invasion of privacy, several jurisdictions have found defendants liable for intrusion on seclusion for actions interfering with family or other nonmarital relationships. See ELDER, supra note 51, § 2:25 (citing cases).

291. Dunlap, 284 Ark. at 10, 678 S.W.2d at 364 (citing ARK. CODE ANN. § 37-201).

292. Id. at 10, 678 S.W.2d at 365. For most invasion of privacy claims under Arkansas law, the three-year statute of limitations applies. See Norris v. Bakker, 320 Ark. 629, 634, 899 S.W.2d 70, 72 (1995) (citing ARK. CODE ANN. § 16-56-105 (Repl. 2005)) (affirming summary judgment in invasion of privacy case on statute of limitations grounds); see infra Part IV.G.1. and accompanying notes (discussing statute of limitations defense).

293. 284 Ark. 83, 679 S.W.2d 190 (1984).

294. Id. at 84, 679 S.W.2d at 191.

295. Id., 679 S.W.2d at 191.

296. Id. at 85, 679 S.W.2d at 191.

297. Id. at 84, 679 S.W.2d at 191.

298. Id. at 86, 679 S.W.2d at 191–92 (citing, e.g., CBM of Cent. Ark. v. Bemel, 274 Ark. 223, 623 S.W.2d 518 (1981)).

299. Crawley, 284 Ark. at 86, 679 S.W.2d at 191–92.

300. Id. at 85, 679 S.W.2d at 191.

301. Id. at 86, 679 S.W.2d at 192 (quoting ARK. R. CIV. P. 51).

-
302. See Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Lee, 348 Ark. 707, 74 S.W.3d 634 (2002); Addington v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 81 Ark. App. 441, 105 S.W.3d 369 (2003).
303. 348 Ark. 707, 74 S.W.3d 634.
304. Id. at 744, 74 S.W.3d at 660.
305. Id. at 713, 74 S.W.3d at 640.
306. Id. at 719, 74 S.W.3d at 644.
307. Id. at 720–21, 74 S.W.3d at 644–45. Because neither party objected to the jury instruction, the appellate court did not address whether or not the instruction accurately described the claim for intrusion. See id. at 721, 74 S.W.3d at 645.
308. Id. at 720, 74 S.W.3d at 644 (citing with approval Fletcher v. Price Chopper Foods of Trumann, Inc., 220 F.3d 871 (8th Cir. 2000)).
309. Lee, 348 Ark. at 720, 74 S.W.3d at 644 (citing Fletcher, 220 F.3d at 877).
310. See id. at 720–21, 74 S.W.3d at 644–45.
311. Id. at 720, 74 S.W.3d at 644; see also RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652B (1977).
312. Lee, 348 Ark. at 721, 74 S.W.3d at 644–45.
313. Id., 74 S.W.3d at 645.
314. See id. at 721–27, 74 S.W.3d at 645–49.
315. Id. at 721, 74 S.W.3d at 645 (citing Fletcher, 220 F.3d at 876); see RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652B.
316. See ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 424 (Ark. Supreme Court Comm. on Jury Instructions 2013) (consent defense). The consent instruction is not to be used with the instruction for intrusion on seclusion because “the absence of consent or other authority is part of a plaintiff’s burden of proof under such a claim.” Id. note on use.
317. ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 420 (second element). Although the issue is not free from doubt, the court’s reasoning that nonconsent is an element of a claim for intrusion on seclusion, rather than an affirmative defense, appears to be consistent with the majority rule. See ELDER, supra note 51, § 2:12 (citations omitted) (“[T]he preferable perspective . . . is that consent, whether express or implied, negates the existence of the tort itself.”). The plaintiff’s legitimate interest in solitude or seclusion, a required element of the claim, may be negated by his own conduct implying consent. Id. (citing RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652B). Nevertheless, the plaintiff can vitiate express or implied consent by showing that it was involuntary, that it was procured by fraud, or that the intrusion exceeded the scope of the consent given. Id. (citing cases, including Lee, 348 Ark. at 720, 74 S.W.3d at 644).
318. Lee, 348 Ark. at 727, 74 S.W.3d at 649.
319. Id. at 724–27, 74 S.W.3d at 646–48.
320. Id. at 726, 74 S.W.3d at 648. “The jury determined that [plaintiff’s] written consent was not given freely and without coercion and, thus, was not valid consent. Considering the totality of the circumstances now before us, we conclude that there is substantial evidence to support the jury’s decision.” Id., 74 S.W.3d at 648.
321. Id. at 745, 74 S.W.3d at 660 (Thornton, J., dissenting).
322. Id., 74 S.W.3d at 660.
323. Id. at 749, 74 S.W.3d at 663.
324. Lee, 348 Ark. at 749, 74 S.W.3d at 663.
325. Id. at 721, 74 S.W.3d at 644–45 (majority opinion).
326. Id., 74 S.W.3d at 645.
327. Id. at 721–22, 74 S.W.3d at 645–46.
328. Id. at 724, 74 S.W.3d at 646.
329. Id. at 726–27, 74 S.W.3d at 648.
330. 81 Ark. App. 441, 105 S.W.3d 369 (2003).

-
331. Id. at 445, 105 S.W.3d at 373 (outrage, false light invasion of privacy, intrusion invasion of privacy, defamation, and negligence).
332. See supra notes 302–28 and accompanying text.
333. Addington, 81 Ark. App. at 457, 105 S.W.3d at 380.
334. Id. at 456, 105 S.W.3d at 380.
335. Id., 105 S.W.3d at 380 (citing Walmart Stores, Inc. v. Lee, 348 Ark. 707, 74 S.W.3d 634 (2002)).
336. Id., 105 S.W.3d at 380 (citations omitted).
337. Id. at 456–57, 459, 105 S.W.3d at 380, 382.
338. 2012 Ark. App. 24, 388 S.W.3d 456.
339. Id. at 3–4, 388 S.W.3d at 460.
340. Id. at 1–3, 388 S.W.3d at 459–60.
341. Id. at 2, 388 S.W.3d at 459.
342. Id., 388 S.W.3d at 459.
343. Id. at 2–3, 388 S.W.3d at 459–60.
344. Coombs, 2012 Ark. App. at 3, 388 S.W. 3d at 460.
345. Id., 388 S.W. 3d at 460.
346. Id., 388 S.W. 3d at 460.
347. Id. at 5, 388 S.W.3d at 461.
348. Id. at 4–5, 388 S.W.3d at 460–61 (quoting ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 420 (Ark. Supreme Court Comm. on Jury Instructions 2013)).
349. Id. at 5, 388 S.W.3d at 461. “An intrusion may occur physically ‘or otherwise.’” Id., 388 S.W.3d at 461 (quoting ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 420).
350. Coombs, 2012 Ark. App. at 5, 388 S.W.3d at 461 (multiple citations to cases from other jurisdictions omitted).
351. Id. at 6, 388 S.W.3d at 461.
352. Id., 388 S.W.3d at 461.
353. Id., 388 S.W.3d at 461–62.
354. Id., 388 S.W.3d at 462.
355. Id. at 7, 388 S.W.3d at 462.
356. Coombs, 2012 Ark. App. at 7–8, 388 S.W.3d at 462–63.
357. Id. at 7, 388 S.W.3d at 462.
358. Id., 388 S.W.3d at 462 (citing, e.g., Porter v. Harshfield, 329 Ark. 130, 948 S.W.2d 83 (1997)). Whether an employee is acting within the scope of employment or not depends on whether the employee is carrying out the purpose of the employer’s enterprise or instead is acting exclusively in the employee’s own interest. Id., 388 S.W.3d at 462 (citations omitted).
359. Coombs, 2012 Ark. App. at 2, 388 S.W.3d at 459.
360. Id. at 8, 388 S.W.3d at 462–63.
361. Id., 388 S.W.3d at 463 (citing J.B. Hunt Transp. v. Doss, 320 Ark. 660, 899 S.W.2d 464 (1995)).
362. 2012 Ark. 369, ___ S.W.3d ___, reh’g denied, Nov. 8, 2012.
363. Id., ___ S.W.3d ___.
364. Id. at 1, ___ S.W.3d at ___.
365. Id., ___ S.W.3d at ___.
366. Id. at 2, ___ S.W.3d at ___.
367. 42 U.S.C. § 1320(d)(6)(a)(2) (2006).
368. Id. Upon conviction, federal statutes classify a “simple criminal violation” for knowingly obtaining health information in violation of HIPAA as a misdemeanor punishable by up to one year in prison, a fine of up to $50,000, or both. 42 U.S.C. § 1320d-6 (2006); see PROSKAUER ON PRIVACY § 3:2.5 (2007). A violation of HIPAA’s Privacy Rule, however, does not allow the victim to file a civil cause of action against the perpetrator. See Bonney v. Stephens Mem. Hosp., 17 A.3d 123, 127–28 (Me. 2011). “[A]ll courts that have decided this question have concluded that HIPAA does not provide a private cause of action.” Id. at 127. But cf. ARK. CODE ANN. § 16-118-107 (Supp. 2011) (authorizing civil cause of action by a victim of conduct by another person that would constitute a felony under Arkansas law).

369. Cannady, 2012 Ark. at 1, ___ S.W.3d at ___.

370. Id. at 1, 4, ___ S.W.3d at ___.

371. ARK. CODE ANN. § 16-62-101(a)(1) (Repl. 2005).

372. Cannady, 2012 Ark. at 4, ___ S.W.3d at ___.

373. Id. at 8, ___ S.W.3d at ___.

374. 41 Ark. 295 (1883). The court also quoted RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652I cmt. b (1977). Cannady, 2012 Ark. at 7, ___ S.W.3d at ___ (absent a statute to the contrary, an invasion of privacy claim “cannot be maintained after the death of the individual whose privacy is invaded,” excepting a claim for appropriation of name or likeness). However, the court ignored the language quoted from the Restatement recognizing that states may allow for survival of claims by statute. Id., ___ S.W.3d at ___. The Arkansas survival statute does just that. Nevertheless, the court interpreted the language of the statute referring to “wrongs done to the person . . . of another” to exclude invasion of privacy claims, even though they protect a right the Restatement itself characterizes as a “personal right.” Id., ___ S.W.3d at ___.

375. Cannady, 2012 Ark. at 5–6, ___ S.W.3d at ___. In 1883, neither Arkansas nor any other state recognized the common law right of privacy. See supra notes 31-51 and accompanying text. Moreover, Arkansas law at that time did not recognize any claim for mental anguish or emotional distress alone apart from physical injury. See St. Louis, I.M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Taylor, 84 Ark. 42, 48, 104 S.W. 551, 553 (1907) (no recovery for mental anguish or humiliation independent of physical injury or other recoverable damages, even if legal duty was willfully violated). The rationale for that holding was that “mental suffering unaccompanied by physical injury . . . is deemed to be too remote, uncertain, and difficult of ascertainment . . .” Id., 104 S.W. at 553. But see M.B.M. Co. v. Counce, 268 Ark. 269, 275–76, 596 S.W.2d 681, 684–685 (1980) (expressly recognizing, for the first time, a claim seeking recovery for emotional distress independent of physical injury or other recoverable damages; observing that Taylor had been implicitly abrogated); Wilson v. Wilkins, 181 Ark. 137, 139, 25 S.W.2d 428, 428 (1930) (mental suffering alone was recoverable as an element of damages that proximately resulted from defendant’s willful act); Lyons v. Smith, 176 Ark. 728, 729, 3 S.W.2d 982, 983 (1928) (mental suffering, annoyance, fear, intimidation, and so forth, will support a cause of action for damages even when unaccompanied by physical injury, if caused by “willful and wanton wrong”). For a brief discussion of Counce and its interpretation of the court’s reasoning in Olan Mills, see supra notes 236-39 and accompanying text.

376. RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652I cmt. a.

377. Cannady, 2012 Ark. at 4, ___ S.W.3d at ___.

378. ARK. CODE ANN. § 16-62-101(a) (Repl. 2005) (emphasis added).

379. Id.

380. Cannady, 2012 Ark. at 8, ___ S.W.3d at ___.

381. Id. at 5–6, ___ S.W.3d at ___. In 1883, when Ward v. Blackwood was decided, the survival statute read as follows:

For wrongs done to the person or property of another, an action may be maintained against the wrong-doers, and such action may be brought by the person injured, or, after his death, by his executor or administrator, against such wrong-doer, or, after his death, against his executor or administrator, in the same manner and with like effect in all respects as actions founded on contracts.

Gantt’s Dig. § 4760.

382. Cannady, 2012 Ark. at 5, ___ S.W.3d at ___ (quoting Ward v. Blackwood, 41 Ark. 295, 298 (1883)).

383. Id. at 5, ___ S.W.3d at ___.

384. Id. at 6, ___ S.W.3d at ___ (citing Reid v. Pierce Cnty., 961 P.2d 333 (Wash. 1998) (holding that immediate relatives of decedent had a privacy interest in decedent’s autopsy records that supported claim against county employees for improperly accessing and displaying autopsy photographs)).

385. Ark. Life Ins. Co. v. Am. Nat’l Life Ins. Co., 110 Ark. 130, 137, 161 S.W. 136, 138 (1913).

386. Cannady, 2012 Ark. at 6, ___ S.W.3d at ___.

387. Id. at 6, ___ S.W.3d at ___ (quoting Ark. Life Ins. Co., 110 Ark. at 137, 161 S.W. at 138). The quoted language has nothing whatsoever to do with personal rights, but rather distinguishes injuries to corporate intangible property interests from injuries to tangible property. In stark contrast, Patricia Cannady asserted a privacy claim for intrusion on her deceased daughter’s personal interest in seclusion, not her property interests.

388. Id. at 8, ___ S.W.3d at ___. After summarizing the parties’ respective arguments and without elaborating, the court simply observed, “This holding is in line with this court’s adoption of the Restatement (Second) of Torts and our case law, most notably Ward. Thus, we affirm the grant of summary judgment on this point.” Id., ___ S.W.3d at ___.

389. Id. at 2, ___ S.W.3d at ___. The complaint alleged, apparently without objection, that defendants Holland, Griffin, and Miller had each pled guilty to a violation of HIPAA, specifically 42 U.S.C. § 1320(d)(6)(a)(2) (2006), which prohibits wrongful disclosure of individually identifiable health information. Cannady, 2012 Ark. at 2, ___ S.W.3d at ___.

390. E.g., M.B.M. Co. v. Counce, 268 Ark. 269, 273–77, 596 S.W.2d 681, 684–85 (1980); see supra notes 237–39 and accompanying text.

391. ARK. CODE ANN. § 16-62-101(a)(1) (Repl. 2005) (emphasis added).

392. See id. § 16-62-101(a)(2).

393. See id. § 16-62-101.

394. See Joshua Michael Robles, Note, Arkansas’s Application of Hedonic Damages to Wrongful-Death Suits: Is Arkansas’s Method Misconceived?, 33 U. ARK. LITTLE ROCK L. REV. 299, 308–09 (2011) (loss of life, like mental anguish and emotional distress, is considered a type of noneconomic harm).

395. ARK. CODE ANN. § 16-62-101(b). “In addition to all other elements of damages provided by law, a decedent’s estate may recover for the decedent’s loss of life as an independent element of damages.” Id.

396. See Cannady, 2012 Ark. at 5, ___ S.W.3d ___. See also supra note 377 and accompanying text.

397. “At common law, all actions for tort died with the tortfeasor. That rule is still in effect in [Arkansas], except where changed by statute. Arkansas Code Annotated § 16-62-101 (1987) has removed that bar as to tortious injury to the person.” Westridge v. Byrd, 37 Ark. App. 72, 73, 823 S.W.2d 930, 930–31 (1992) (emphasis added) (citations omitted); see Lauderdale v. Smith, 186 F. Supp. 958, 959 (E.D. Ark. 1960) (observing that Arkansas survival statute allowing survival of personal tort claims, other than libel and slander, is contrary to federal common law rule that only contract and property tort actions survive).

398. Green v. Mills, 339 Ark. 200, 205, 4 S.W.3d 493, 496 (1999) (emphasis added).

399. ARK. CODE ANN. § 16-62-101(a)(1).

400. Green, 339 Ark. at 205, 4 S.W.3d at 495.

401. ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 420 cmt. (Ark. Supreme Court Comm. on Jury Instructions 2013).

402. 96 F.R.D. 658 (W.D. Ark. 1983).

403. Id. at 660.

404. Id. at 668–69.

405. Id. at 660.

406. Id.

-
407. Id. at 669 (citing WILLIAM PROSSER, THE LAW OF TORTS § 112, ch. 22 (3d ed. 1964); Bill Prewett, Note, The Crimination of Peeping Toms and Other Men of Vision, 5 ARK. L. REV. 388 (1951)).
408. Williams, 96 F.R.D. at 669 (quoting PROSSER, supra note 406, § 112, ch. 22).
409. Id.
410. 189 F.3d 735 (8th Cir. 1999).
411. Id. at 738.
412. Id. at 735.
413. Id. at 742.
414. See id. at 742–43.
415. Id.
416. Alexander, 189 F.3d at 742–43.
417. Id. at 743. While not directly relevant to the facts presented, ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-60-120(a) (Repl. 2005) allows a party to a cordless or cell phone conversation to record it with or without the other party’s knowledge. Alexander, 189 F.3d at 743.
418. See id. at 742–43.
419. 220 F.3d 871 (8th Cir. 2000).
420. Id. at 874. Arkansas health regulations forbid food preparation establishments from employing workers with communicable diseases such as staph infections. Id. at 874 n.2 (citing Ark. Dept. of Health Regs., Food Service Establishments § 3-101 (effective Oct. 28, 1993)).
421. Id. at 874.
422. Id. at 873–74.
423. Id. at 873.
424. Id.
425. One member of the panel concurred specially on the basis that the evidence in the record negated the third element of the intrusion claim, a legitimate expectation of privacy, because plaintiff had told two of her co-workers about the staph infection shortly after learning about it from her doctor. Fletcher, 220 F.3d at 879 (McMillian, J., concurring specially).
426. See id. at 871.
427. Id. at 877.
428. Id. at 877–78.
429. Id. at 878–79. In this respect, the majority reasoned that the defendant employer had a legitimate reason to inquire about her infectious medical condition out of concern for public health. Id. Under such conditions, “an employer’s need to know trumps an employee’s right to privacy.” Id. at 879 (citation omitted).
430. RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652B (1977).
431. ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 420 (Ark. Supreme Court Comm. on Jury Instructions 2013).
432. See ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 424 note on use.
433. See Cannady, 2012 Ark. at 8, ___ S.W.3d at ___.
434. E.g., Dodrill v. Ark. Democrat Co., 265 Ark. 628, 637, 590 S.W.2d 840, 844 (1979) (dicta) (citing RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652A(2)(c)); see also Williams v. Am. Broad. Cos., 96 F.R.D. 658, 669 (W.D. Ark. 1983) (dicta).
435. See Wood v. Nat’l Computer Sys., Inc., 643 F. Supp. 1093, 1099 (W.D. Ark. 1986) (citing RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652D), aff’d, 814 F.2d 544, 545 (8th Cir. 1987); Williams, 96 F.R.D. at 669; Boyd v. Thomson Newspaper Publ’g Co., 6 Media L. Rptr. (BNA) 1020, 1022 (W.D. Ark. 1980); Dunbar v. Cox Health Alliance, LLC, 446 B.R. 306, 314 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 2011).
436. ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 422.
437. See RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652D.
438. ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 422.

-
439. Id.; see RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652D cmt. a.
440. RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652D cmt. a.
441. Wood v. Nat'l Computer Sys., Inc., 643 F. Supp. 1093, 1099 (Bankr. W.D. Ark. 1986), aff'd, 814 F.2d 544 (8th Cir. 1987); Dunbar v. Cox Health Alliance, LLC, 446 B.R. 306, 314 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 2011).
442. 6 Media L. Rptr. (BNA) 1020, 1022 (W.D. Ark. 1980).
443. Id. at 1023.
444. Id. at 1021.
445. Id.
446. Id.
447. Id.
448. Boyd, 6 Media L. Rptr. (BNA) at 1020.
449. Id. at 1022 (citing RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652I cmt. a).
450. Id.
451. Id. at 1023.
452. 643 F. Supp. 1093, 1099 (W.D. Ark. 1986), aff'd, 814 F.2d 544, 545 (8th Cir. 1987).
453. Id. at 1094–95.
454. Id. at 1094.
455. Id. at 1099.
456. Id. Affirming, the Eighth Circuit observed, “Here, there was no ‘publicity,’ properly so called, but only disclosure to a single other person.” Wood, 814 F.2d at 545.
457. 446 B.R. 306 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 2011).
458. Id. at 315.
459. Id. at 308–09; see, e.g., Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9037 (requiring creditors to redact all private information when filing proofs of claim in bankruptcy court). While the plaintiff argued that disclosure of plaintiff’s medical information amounted to a HIPAA violation, the parties agreed that no private cause of action arose from the HIPAA violation. Dunbar, 446 B.R. at 309–10.
460. Dunbar, 446 B.R. at 314–15.
461. Id. at 315 (citing In re French, 401 B.R. 295, 318 (Bankr. E.D. Tenn. 2009)).
462. Id. at 312, 315.
463. Id. at 315.
464. ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 422 (Ark. Supreme Court Comm. on Jury Instructions 2013).
465. Id.
466. Id.
467. Id. The bracketed language is to be included only if supported by the evidence. Id. note on use.
468. Boyd v. Thomson Newspaper Publ'g Co., 6 Media L. Rep. (BNA) 1020, 1023 (W.D. Ark. 1980); see supra notes 449–50 and accompanying text.
469. See ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 422.
470. 610 F.2d 542 (8th Cir. 1979).
471. Id. at 543.
472. Id.
473. Id.
474. Id. at 544–45.
475. Id. at 544.
476. 265 Ark. 628, 590 S.W.2d 840 (1979).
477. See supra notes 90–94 and accompanying text.
478. Doddrill, 265 Ark. at 633, 590 S.W.2d at 842.
479. Id. at 631, 590 S.W.2d at 841.
480. Id. at 636–37, 590 S.W.2d at 844.

481. Id. at 637, 590 S.W.2d at 844.

482. Id., 590 S.W.2d at 844. Three of the seven justices dissented from the court's ruling reversing summary judgment on the defamation claim. They would have held that the plaintiff attorney was in fact a public figure because he held a position of public trust and had breached that trust when suspended from the practice of law. Id. at 640–41, 590 S.W.2d at 846 (Hickman, J., joined by Smith & Holt, JJ., dissenting). The dissenters cautioned that the majority's ruling unduly constrained the freedom of speech protected by the First Amendment. Id. at 641, 590 S.W.2d at 846.

483. Id. at 637, 590 S.W.2d at 844 (majority opinion).

484. Dodrill, 265 Ark. at 638, 590 S.W.2d at 845.

485. Id. at 638–39, 590 S.W.2d at 845–46 (citing Time, Inc. v. Hill, 385 U.S. 374 (1967); RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652E). The Eighth Circuit has held that actual malice in this context means publication of false information with intent that the public construe the information as factual. People's Bank & Trust Co. of Mountain Home v. Globe Int'l Publ'g, Inc., 978 F.2d 1065, 1068 (8th Cir. 1992).

486. See Dodrill, 265 Ark. at 639 & n.9, 590 S.W.2d at 845 & n.9 (observing that the Supreme Court had retracted from Time, Inc. v. Hill with respect to defamation claims, thus requiring only public figures to prove actual malice, but the Court had not revisited that issue with respect to false light claims (citing Cantrell v. Forest City Publ'g Co., 419 U.S. 245 (1974))).

487. 376 U.S. 254 (1964).

488. Dodrill, 265 Ark. at 639, 590 S.W.2d at 845.

489. Id. at 639–40, 590 S.W.2d at 846.

490. 306 Ark. 108, 812 S.W.2d 97 (1991). The court acknowledged the claim in dicta in Dunlap v. McCarty, 284 Ark. 5, 9, 678 S.W.2d 361, 364 (1984), which addressed an unsuccessful claim for intrusion on seclusion.

491. Dodson, 306 Ark. at 110, 812 S.W.2d at 97–98.

492. The plaintiff characterized the defamation claim as one for libel per se. Id., 812 S.W.2d at 98. Marinetta Dicker was not a party to the suit, perhaps because she was then a public figure as president of the State Board of Therapy Technology. See id., 812 S.W.2d at 97.

493. Id., 812 S.W.2d at 98.

494. Id. at 110, 112, 812 S.W.2d at 98, 99.

495. Id. at 112, 812 S.W.2d at 99.

496. Dodson, 306 Ark. at 113, 812 S.W.2d at 99 (citing Dodrill v. Ark. Democrat Co., 265 Ark. 628, 590 S.W.2d 840 (1979)); see also Stanley v. Gen. Media Commc'ns, Inc., 149 F. Supp. 2d 701, 707 (W.D. Ark. 2001) (citing Dodrill, 265 Ark. 628, 590 S.W.2d 840; People's Bank & Trust v. Globe Int'l Publ'g, Inc., 978 F.2d 1065, 1068 (8th Cir. 1992)).

497. Dodson, 306 Ark. at 115, 812 S.W.2d at 100.

498. See id., 812 S.W.2d at 100.

499. Id., 812 S.W.2d at 98; Dodrill, 265 Ark. at 638, 590 S.W.2d at 845; see also Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Lee, 348 Ark. 707, 739 n.4, 74 S.W.3d 634, 656 n.4 (2002).

500. Dodson, 306 Ark. at 108, 812 S.W.2d at 98; Dodrill, 265 Ark. at 638, 590 S.W.2d at 845 (citing, e.g., RESTATEMENT SECOND OF TORTS § 652E cmt. b (1977)).

501. See Dunlap v. McCarty, 284 Ark. 5, 10, 678 S.W.2d 361, 364 (1984). While the Arkansas courts recognize false light invasion of privacy as a claim distinct from defamation, they have also held that the defenses applicable to defamation claims apply as well to claims for false light invasion of privacy and publicity given to private facts, which both require publicity as a necessary element. E.g., ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 422, 423 (Ark. Supreme Court Comm. on Jury Instructions 2013) (citing RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS §§ 652F to 652G).

-
502. See Dodson, 306 Ark. at 113, 812 S.W.2d at 99 (citing Dodrill, 265 Ark. 628, 590 S.W.2d 840; RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652E).
503. 978 F.2d 1065 (8th Cir. 1992).
504. Id. at 1067. The jury awarded her $650,000 in compensatory damages and $850,000 in punitive damages. Id.
505. Id. at 1068.
506. Id. at 1069.
507. Id. at 1069–70.
508. People’s Bank, 978 F.2d at 1070.
509. Id. (citing Time, Inc. v. Hill, 385 U.S. 374, 389 (1967)).
510. Id. at 1069–70.
511. Id. at 1070.
512. Id. (citing Harte-Hanks Commc’ns, Inc. v. Connaughton, 491 U.S. 657, 692 (1989)).
513. Id.
514. People’s Bank, 978 F.2d at 1070.
515. Id.
516. See supra notes 301–36 and accompanying text.
517. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Lee, 348 Ark. 707, 74 S.W.3d 634 (2002); Addington v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 81 Ark. App. 441, 105 S.W.3d 369 (2003). The claims for intrusion on seclusion, also advanced in these cases based upon the defendant’s search of each plaintiff’s property, were addressed in an earlier subsection of this Article. See supra notes 301–36 and accompanying text.
518. Lee, 348 Ark. at 742–43, 74 S.W.3d at 658–59.
519. Id. at 740, 74 S.W.3d at 656–57. The Arkansas Model Jury Instructions acknowledge that the Supreme Court has expressly left the issue open. See ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 423 cmt. (Ark. Supreme Court Comm. on Jury Instructions 2013) (citing Lee, 348 Ark. 707, 74 S.W.3d 634).
520. 418 U.S. 323 (1974).
521. Lee, 348 Ark. at 740, 74 S.W.3d at 657.
522. Id., 74 S.W.3d at 657.
523. Id. at 744, 74 S.W.3d at 659.
524. Addington v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 81 Ark. App. 441, 454, 105 S.W.3d 369, 379 (2003).
525. Id. at 445, 105 S.W.3d at 373.
526. Id. at 454, 105 S.W.3d at 379. In doing so, however, the court erroneously held that a plaintiff must prove the elements of the false light claim by clear and convincing evidence, citing Dodrill. Addington, 81 Ark. App. at 452, 105 S.W.3d at 377. This statement is not consistent with the holdings of the court in false-light claims. If applicable, the plaintiff must prove only the element of actual malice by clear and convincing evidence to satisfy First Amendment considerations announced in New York Times Co., Inc. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254 (1964). And in Lee, the jury was given an instruction erroneously requiring proof of every element by clear and convincing evidence, but neither party challenged the instruction on appeal. Lee, 348 Ark. at 740, 74 S.W.3d at 657. No court in Arkansas has ever held that a plaintiff must prove each required element of a claim for false light publicity by clear and convincing evidence. See ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 423 (confirming that only actual malice, if applicable, must be proved by clear and convincing evidence; all other elements require proof only by a preponderance of evidence).
527. Addington, 81 Ark. App. at 453, 105 S.W.3d at 378.
528. Id. at 453–54, 105 S.W.3d at 378–79. The qualified privilege defense is discussed infra Part IV.G.3. and accompanying notes.
529. Id. at 454, 105 S.W.3d at 378–79.

530. 682 F. Supp. 2d 909 (E.D. Ark. 2009). While the parties disputed whether Arkansas or Tennessee law applied in that case, the court held that summary judgment was appropriate no matter which state's law applied. Id. at 925.

531. Id. at 909.

532. Id. at 912–14.

533. Id. at 932.

534. Id. at 926–30.

535. Id. at 930, 932 (citing Dodrill v. Ark. Democrat Co., 265 Ark. 628, 638–39, 590 S.W.2d 840, 845 (1979)).

536. Hobbs, 682 F. Supp. 2d at 932 (quoting Dodrill, 265 Ark. at 638–39, 590 S.W.2d at 845).

537. Id.

538. ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 423 (Ark. Supreme Court Comm. on Jury Instructions 2013).

539. Id.

540. Id. Whether a plaintiff who is not a public figure and who claims invasion of privacy by false light publicity pertaining to a matter not of public concern must prove actual malice remains an open question in Arkansas by virtue of the court's reasoning in Lee. See ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 423 cmt. (citing Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Lee, 348 Ark. 707, 74 S.W.3d 634 (2002)).

541. E.g., Sexton Law Firm, P.A. v. Milligan, 329 Ark. 285, 298, 948 S.W.2d 388, 395 (1997). See generally RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 874 (1979) (“One standing in a fiduciary relation with another is subject to liability to the other for harm resulting from a breach of duty imposed by the relation.”); ELDER, supra note 51, §§ 5:1–5.3.

542. Cole v. Laws, 349 Ark. 177, 185–86, 76 S.W.3d 878, 883 (2002) (“Self-dealing breaches the fiduciary duty even when the action taken is innocent and unintentional.” (citing Hosey v. Burgess, 319 Ark. 183, 890 S.W.2d 262 (1995))).

543. See generally ELDER, supra note 51, § 5:1. Whether a fiduciary duty exists in any particular case is a question of law. See Long v. Lampton, 324 Ark. 511, 520, 922 S.W.2d 692, 698 (1996).

544. E.g., Fierstein v. DePaul Health Ctr., 24 S.W.3d 220, 224 (Mo. Ct. App. 2000).

545. See Rees v. Smith, 2009 Ark. 169, at 3–4, 301 S.W.3d 467, 471 (reversing jury award of $10,000 for emotional distress based on alleged breach of fiduciary duty arising from attorney-client relationship when defendant demanded sexual favors from plaintiff in exchange for his continued legal representation).

546. See RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652H (1977).

One who has established a cause of action for invasion of his privacy is entitled to recover damages for

- (a) the harm to his interest in privacy resulting from the invasion;
- (b) his mental distress proved to have been suffered if it is of a kind that normally results from such an invasion; and
- (c) special damage of which the invasion is a legal cause.

Id.

547. E.g., Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Lee, 348 Ark. 707, 744, 74 S.W.3d 634, 660 (2002) (upholding award of compensatory and punitive damages); AAA T.V. & Stereo Rentals, Inc. v. Crawley, 284 Ark. 83, 84, 679 S.W.2d 190, 191 (1984) (affirming award of compensatory and punitive damages for invasion of privacy in repossessing rented television).

548. Cf. Bayer CropScience LP v. Schafer, 2011 Ark. 518, at 15, 385 S.W.3d 822, 832–33 (declining to resolve whether purely economic losses may be recovered in negligence actions).

549. ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 419–423 (Ark. Supreme Court Comm. on Jury Instructions 2013). On the other hand, a plaintiff may recover nominal damages for the privacy invasion in the absence of proof of actual damages. Cf. Dunlap v. McCarty, 284 Ark. 5, 6, 678 S.W.2d 361, 362 (1984) (jury returned verdict for plaintiffs but awarded no damages; judgment reversed on appeal on statute of limitations grounds).

550. See Crawley, 284 Ark. at 85, 679 S.W.2d at 191.

551. Id., 679 S.W.2d at 191 (citations omitted).

552. Agracat, Inc. v. AFS-NWA, LLC, 2010 Ark. App. 458, at 6–7, 379 S.W.3d 64, 68–69 (citations omitted).

553. Id. at 7, 379 S.W.3d at 69.

554. ARK. CODE ANN. § 16-55-206 (Repl. 2003) (“In order to recover punitive damages from a defendant, a plaintiff has the burden of proving that the defendant is liable for compensatory damages”); Fletcher v. Price Chopper Foods of Trumann, Inc., 220 F.3d 871, 879 (8th Cir. 2000) (citing Hale v. Ladd, 308 Ark. 567, 571, 826 S.W.2d 244, 247 (1992)); Bell v. McManus, 294 Ark. 275, 277, 742 S.W.2d 559, 560 (1988); see Bayer CropScience LP v. Schafter, 2011 Ark. 518, at 13, 385 S.W.3d 822, 831 (citations omitted) (“[P]unitive damages are dependent upon the recovery of compensatory damages, as an award of actual damages is a predicate for the recovery of punitive damages.”). For cases upholding punitive damages awards for privacy torts, see Peoples Bank & Trust Co. v. Globe International Publishing, Inc., 978 F.2d 1065 (8th Cir. 1992) (upholding award of $850,000); Crawley, 284 Ark. at 84, 679 S.W.2d at 191 (upholding award of $15,000); CBM of Central Arkansas v. Bemel, 274 Ark. 223, 623 S.W.2d 518 (1981) (upholding award of $4,000).

555. What constitutes a “nominal” award varies depending on the facts of each case. See Stoner v. Houston, 265 Ark. 928, 933, 582 S.W.2d 28, 31 (1979) (citing Ray Dodge, Inc. v. Moore, 251 Ark. 1036, 479 S.W.2d 518 (1972)).

556. Id. at 933, 582 S.W.2d at 31 (citing Manhattan Credit Co. v. Skirvin, 228 Ark. 913, 311 S.W.2d 168 (1958)).

557. Clear and convincing evidence is defined as “proof that enables [the jury] without hesitation to reach a firm conviction that [an] allegation is true.” ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 2218 (Ark. Supreme Court Comm. on Jury Instructions 2013).

558. Id.; see ARK. CODE ANN. §§ 16-55-206 to -211 (Repl. 2005) (governing punitive damage awards). The Arkansas Supreme Court recently held unconstitutional section 16-55-208, which capped punitive damages in the absence of clear and convincing evidence that the defendant intended to cause injury or damage. Bayer CropScience LP, 2011 Ark. at 13, 385 S.W.3d at 831.

559. ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 2218; see Porter v. Lincoln, 282 Ark. 258, 261-B, 668 S.W.2d 11, 14 (1984); Bank of Cabot v. Ray, 279 Ark. 92, 94, 648 S.W.2d 800, 801 (1983).

560. See State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Campbell, 538 U.S. 408, 416–18 (2003); Honda Motor Co., Ltd. v. Oberg, 512 U.S. 415, 420 (1994).

561. ARK. CODE ANN. § 16-55-210 (referring to judicial duty to “[s]crutinize” all punitive damage awards to ensure compliance with “applicable procedural, evidentiary, and constitutional requirements” and to “[o]rder remittitur where appropriate”).

562. E.g., Webber v. Gray, 228 Ark. 289, 307 S.W.2d 80 (1957).

563. See id. at 295–96, 307 S.W.2d at 83–84.

564. McCambridge v. City of Little Rock, 298 Ark. 219, 225, 766 S.W.2d 909, 911 (1989).

565. See Am. Investors Life Ins. Co. v. TCB Transp., Inc., 312 Ark. 343, 345, 849 S.W.2d 509, 511 (1993) (mere existence of cause of action at law does not deprive court of equity jurisdiction unless legal remedy is “clear, adequate, and complete” (quoting Honor v. Yamuchi, 307 Ark. 324, 870 S.W.2d 267 (1991))).

566. See Doe v. TCI Cablevision, 110 S.W.3d 363, 375 (Mo. 2003). See generally ELDER, supra note 51, § 6:15.

567. O'Mara v. Dykema, 328 Ark. 310, 317, 942 S.W.2d 854, 858 (1997) (“It has long been the law in this state that a three-year statute of limitations applies to all tort actions not otherwise limited by law.” (citing Burton v. Tribble, 189 Ark. 58, 70 S.W.2d 503 (1934))); see ARK. CODE ANN. §§ 16-56-104 to -105 (Repl. 2005); Norris v. Bakker, 320 Ark. 629, 631–32, 899 S.W.2d 70, 71 (1995); Dunlap v. McCarty, 284 Ark. 5, 10, 678 S.W.2d 361, 364 (1984).

568. Dunlap, 284 Ark. at 10, 678 S.W.2d at 364–65 (holding that whether the alleged intrusion amounted to defamation or intrusion on seclusion, it sought special damages based on spoken words, to which the one-year statute of limitations applied).

569. Norris, 320 Ark. at 633, 899 S.W.2d at 71–72 (citing Hampton v. Taylor, 318 Ark. 771, 887 S.W.2d 535 (1994)).

570. See ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 424 (Ark. Supreme Court Comm. on Jury Instructions 2013). Similarly, a constitutional right of privacy may be waived. See Pulaski Cnty. v. Ark. Democrat-Gazette, Inc., 371 Ark. 217, 220–21, 264 S.W.3d 465, 467–68 (2007) (intervenor, a county contractor, waived any constitutional right of privacy she may have had in the content of email messages to county official addressing both business and personal matters).

571. See ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 420 (defining intentional intrusion element to include proof that the defendant “believed or was substantially certain that [defendant] lacked the necessary legal authority or personal permission, invitation, or valid consent to commit the intrusive act”); see also ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 424 note on use (precluding use of consent instruction with ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 420 “since the absence of consent or other authority is part of a plaintiff’s burden of proof under such a claim”). The rationale may be that the claim rests on an intrusion on the plaintiff’s seclusion, so a plaintiff must first establish an objective manifestation of a desire to maintain solitude or seclusion.

572. ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 420.

573. Contrast the requirement that the intrusion must be “highly offensive to a reasonable person” as a result of defendant’s conduct that a “reasonable person” would find strongly objectionable. ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 420. Under that standard, the plaintiff’s subjective feelings about the intrusion are not relevant. Yet the plaintiff is required to prove that the defendant subjectively believed he or she lacked valid consent to commit the intrusion. Id.

574. E.g., ELDER, supra note 51, §§ 2:12, 3:9, 4:8, 6:6; see, e.g., Leggett v. First Interstate Bank of Or., N.A., 739 P.2d 1083, 1086 (Or. Ct. App. 1987) (“Strictly speaking, consent is not a defense to invasion of privacy. Rather, lack of consent is an element of the tort . . .”). But see Green v. Penn-Am. Ins. Co., 242 S.W.3d 374, 379 n.6 (Mo. Ct. App. 2007) (declining to hold that “lack of consent” is an element of a claim for appropriation of name or likeness).

575. As noted earlier, Arkansas is a fact-pleading state. ARK. R. CIV. P. 8.

576. An example is New York. See N.Y. CIV. RIGHTS LAW § 50 (McKinney 2009) (to avoid liability, defendant must establish plaintiff’s written consent).

577. ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 424; see, e.g., Alexander v. Pathfinder, 189 F.3d 735, 742 (8th Cir. 1999) (plaintiff failed to object when defendant’s employees tape-recorded her conversations).

578. Wal-Mart Co., Inc. v. Lee, 348 Ark. 707, 727, 74 S.W.3d 634, 649 (2002) (holding that plaintiff’s written and implied consent were not voluntary, and defendant’s conduct exceeded the scope of plaintiff’s verbal consent).

579. See ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 424; Lee, 348 Ark. at 724, 74 S.W.3d at 647.

580. RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS §§ 652F-652G (1977); see also ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 422 cmt., 423 cmt.

581. See ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 420, 421; see also Froelich v. Adair, 516 P.2d 993, 996 (Kan. 1973) (qualified privilege applicable to defamation claim does not apply to claim for intrusion on seclusion, for which publication is not an element). One scholar has criticized this position as “dubious” and inconsistent with the consensus in other states that the set of qualified privileges applicable to defamation law generally applies to all claims for invasion of privacy. See ELDER, supra note 51, § 2:13 (citations omitted).

582. See Froelich, 516 P.2d at 996.

583. ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 409 cmt. (citing Minor v. Failla, 329 Ark. 274, 282, 946 S.W.2d 954, 958 (1997), overruled on other grounds, United Ins. Co. of Am. v. Murphy, 331 Ark. 364, 961 S.W.2d 752 (1998)).

584. Id. (citing Lee, 348 Ark. at 724, 74 S.W.3d at 647).

585. Lee, 348 Ark. at 734–37, 743–44, 74 S.W.3d at 653–55, 659.

586. Id. at 735, 74 S.W.3d at 653–54 (quoting Minor, 329 Ark. at 283, 946 S.W.2d at 958–59) (other internal citations omitted); see also id. at 743–44, 74 S.W.3d at 659 (reiterating the same standard). The elements of the qualified privilege defense in the context of a defamation claim are set out in ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 409.

587. Lee, 348 Ark. at 737, 743, 74 S.W.3d at 655, 659.

588. Addington v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 81 Ark. App. 441, 453–54, 105 S.W.3d 369, 378–79 (2003) (applying qualified privilege to affirm summary judgment on both false light and defamation claims). However, the court reversed and remanded the intrusion on seclusion claim, to which the qualified immunity defense did not apply. See id. at 457, 105 S.W.3d at 380 (holding that a fact question remained as to whether plaintiff’s consent was voluntary).

589. One variation on qualified immunity as a defense is the requirement that a false light claim include proof of actual malice, at least when the challenged communication relates to public figures and matters of public concern. See supra note 539 and accompanying text. Because false light claims involving publicity raise First Amendment concerns, the qualified immunity defense raises the burden of proof as a prerequisite for a claim seeking damages for communications of the sort most likely to warrant First Amendment protection—those involving public figures and those pertaining to matters of public concern. Compare ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 407 (providing jury instruction for defamation claim by private figure plaintiff; requiring at minimum proof of negligence in failing to determine truth of statement before publication) with ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 408 (providing jury instruction for defamation claim by public figure plaintiff, requiring clear and convincing evidence that defendant published the defamatory fact “knowing it was false or with a high degree of awareness of its probable falsity”).

590. See supra notes 484–85, 539 and accompanying text.

591. See ELDER, supra note 51, §§ 3:17, 4:2.

592. 96 F.R.D. 658, 662 (W.D. Ark. 1983).

593. Id. at 668–69. The false light and defamation claims were asserted by a surgeon who claimed that the defendants had falsely portrayed him as engaging in unnecessary medical procedures. Id. at 660. The other privacy claims were asserted by the patient, whose surgery was filmed by the defendants without her knowledge or consent. The claims were consolidated by the court because they arose from the same set of facts. Id. at 662.

594. Id. at 660.

595. Id. at 663.

596. Id. at 662–63 (quoting ARK. CODE ANN. § 43-917). The statutory privilege applies to both civil and criminal proceedings. Williams, 96 F.R.D. at 663 (citing Saxton v. Ark. Gazette Co., 264 Ark. 133, 135, 569 S.W.2d 115, 116 (1978)).

597. Id. at 663, 665.

598. Id. at 668–69 (discussing Herbert v. Lando, 441 U.S. 153 (1979)). The federal district court for the Eastern District of Arkansas, in an unpublished opinion, recently suggested that more stringent pleading requirements may apply to defamation claims against distributors of newspapers and magazines, i.e., “specific allegations of facts demonstrating either actual knowledge of the tortious nature of the book or facts giving rise to a duty to investigate.” Steinbuch v. Hachette Book Grp., No. 4:08CV00456 JLH, 2009 WL 963588, at *3 (E.D. Ark. Apr. 8, 2009) (citing Lewis v. Time, Inc., 83 F.R.D. 455, 465 (E.D. Cal. 1979)). In the absence of such specific allegations, the court dismissed the plaintiff’s claim for public disclosure of private facts. Id. at *4.

599. Williams, 96 F.R.D. at 670.

600. 376 U.S. 254 (1964).

601. Williams, 96 F.R.D. at 670.

602. Id.

603. Id.

604. Arkansas Model Jury Instructions refer to the qualified privilege defense as the “fair report” privilege. See ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 410 & cmt. (Ark. Supreme Court Comm. on Jury Instructions 2013) (citing, e.g., Whiteside v. Russellville Newspaper, Inc., 2009 Ark. 135, at 6–7, 295 S.W.3d 798, 801–02).

605. ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 410. The instruction is modeled after RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 611 (1977).

606. ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 410; see Whiteside, 2009 Ark. at 6–7, 295 S.W.3d at 801 (citing RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 611).

607. See ELDER, supra note 51, § 3:15 n.31.

608. ARK. CODE ANN. §§ 25-19-103 to -110 (Supp. 2011).

609. Id. § 25-19-103(1).

610. E.g., Bryant v. Weiss, 335 Ark. 534, 538, 983 S.W.2d 902, 904 (1998).

[T]he intent of the Freedom of Information Act was to establish the right of the public to be fully apprised of the conduct of public business. As a rule, statutes enacted for the public benefit are to be interpreted most favorably to the public. The Freedom of Information Act was passed wholly in the public interest and is to be liberally interpreted to the end that its praiseworthy purposes may be achieved.

Id. (citing, e.g., City of Fayetteville v. Edmark, 304 Ark. 179, 184–85, 801 S.W.2d 275, 278 (1990)).

611. ARK. CODE ANN. § 25-19-105(b).

612. McCambridge v. City of Little Rock, 298 Ark. 219, 231, 766 S.W.2d 909, 915 (1989) (citing Nixon v. Adm’r. of Gen. Servs., 433 U.S. 425, 458 (1977)).

613. See id., 766 S.W.2d at 915 (observing that the plaintiff’s privacy interest in nondisclosure varied among the items she sought to prevent defendants from releasing).

614. For example, the Arkansas Supreme Court has rejected an attorney’s argument that the attorney-client privilege provides a basis for an exception to disclosure of public records under the Arkansas Freedom of Information Act. Id. at 225–26, 766 S.W.2d at 912 (attorney-client privilege is a rule of evidence only and does not provide an exception to a substantive act requiring disclosure of public records).

615. 89 Ark. 551, 117 S.W. 746 (1909); see also Mabry v. Kettering, 92 Ark. 81, 122 S.W. 115 (1909) (second appeal).

616. Mabry, 89 Ark. at 551–52, 117 S.W. at 746.

617. Id. at 553, 117 S.W. at 747.

618. See Ark. Dep’t of Human Servs. v. Heath, 312 Ark. 206, 215, 848 S.W.2d 927, 932 (1993).

619. McCambridge, 298 Ark. at 230, 766 S.W.2d at 914.

620. Id. at 231, 766 S.W.2d at 915.

621. Id. at 232–32, 766 S.W.2d at 915; cf. Young v. Rice, 308 Ark. 593, 598, 826 S.W.2d 252, 255 (1992) (holding that personnel record exception in Arkansas Freedom of Information Act requires weighing public's right to knowledge of records against individual right to privacy).

622. E.g., Thomas v. Hall, 2012 Ark. 66, at 13, 399 S.W.3d 387, 395. “[T]his court has consistently held that it interprets exceptions to the FOIA narrowly and in favor of disclosure. Ambiguous exemptions will be interpreted in a manner favoring disclosure.” Id., 399 S.W.3d at 395 (citation omitted). The party seeking to avoid disclosure has the burden of proof that the information is within the scope of an exception. See Stillely v. McBride, 332 Ark. 306, 313, 965 S.W.2d 125, 128 (1998).

623. ARK. CODE ANN. § 25-19-105(b)(12) (Supp. 2011); see 20 U.S.C. § 1232g (Supp. 2011).

624. ARK. CODE ANN. § 25-19-105(b)(2).

625. E.g., Stillely, 332 Ark. at 314, 965 S.W.2d at 128–29 (precluding disclosure under personnel records exception of police officers’ home addresses; purpose of Act is to keep electors advised of performance of public officials and to enable them to learn and to report on public officials’ activities); Young, 308 Ark. at 598, 826 S.W.2d at 255 (interpreting “clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy” to preclude disclosure of examination results of other candidates for promotion to police lieutenant); see Ark. Gazette Co. v. So. State Coll., 273 Ark. 248, 251, 620 S.W.2d 258, 260 (1981) (“No one has a reasonable expectation of privacy concerning the amount of public funds dispersed [sic] to him [by a public educational institution] unless that person clearly comes within one of the exceptions [to the Arkansas FOIA] which by law are required to be closed to the public.”); cf. Nat’l Archives & Records Admin. v. Favish, 541 U.S. 157, 167 (2004) (interpreting analogous exceptions in federal act with respect to Vince Foster suicide). Exceptions to the Arkansas Freedom of Information Act have been the subject of a host of Arkansas Attorney General opinions. E.g., Ark. Op. Att’y Gen. No. 2011-152 (personnel records); Ark. Op. Att’y Gen. No. 2012-083 (educational records).

626. ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-60-120(a) (Repl. 2005) (not unlawful for one party to record a conversation, with or without other party’s consent); see Alexander v. Pathfinder, 189 F.3d 735, 743 (8th Cir. 1999).

627. 234 Ark. 495, 353 S.W.2d 22 (1962).

628. See ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 420–424 (Ark. Supreme Court Comm. on Jury Instructions 2013).

629. See RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652C cmt. b (1977).

The common form of invasion of privacy under the rule here stated is the appropriation and use of the plaintiff’s name or likeness to advertise the defendant’s business or product, or for some similar commercial purpose. Apart from statute, however, the rule stated is not limited to commercial appropriation. It applies also when the defendant makes use of the plaintiff’s name or likeness for his own purposes and benefit, even though the use is not a commercial one, and even though the benefit sought to be obtained is not a pecuniary one. Statutes in some states have, however, limited the liability to commercial uses of the name or likeness.

Id. (emphasis added).

630. See N.Y. CIV. RIGHTS LAW §§ 50–51 (McKinney 2009).

631. LasikPlus Murphy, M.D., P.A. v. LCA-Vision, Inc., 776 F. Supp. 2d 886, 899 (E.D. Ark. 2011); Stanley v. Gen. Media Comm’ns, Inc., 149 F. Supp. 2d 701, 706 (W.D. Ark. 2001).

632. See ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 421 & cmt.

633. Id. (citing Stanley, 149 F. Supp. 2d 701).

634. Compare id. (requiring proof that the defendant’s use of plaintiff’s name or likeness was for defendant’s “own purposes or benefit, commercial or otherwise”) with RESTATEMENT

(SECOND) OF TORTS § 652C cmt. b (stating that the prohibited use “is not limited to commercial appropriation”).

635. E.g., Carson v. Here’s Johnny Portable Toilets, Inc., 698 F.2d 831, 835 (6th Cir. 1983) (applying Michigan law); Ettore v. Philco Television Broad. Corp., 229 F.2d 481, 491–92 (3d Cir. 1956) (interpreting Pennsylvania, Delaware, New Jersey, and New York law).

636. See generally Richard Ausness, The Right of Publicity: A “Haystack in a Hurricane,” 55 TEMP. L.Q. 977 (1982) (describing evolution of the right of publicity).

637. But see Jennifer E. Rothman, Copyright and the Right of Publicity, 36 U.C. DAVIS L. REV. 199, 203 & n.9 (2002) (erroneously suggesting that Arkansas adopted the common law right of publicity in Olan Mills). Olan Mills did not assert the right of publicity. See Olan Mills, Inc. of Tex. v. Dodd, 234 Ark. 495, 496–97, 353 S.W.2d 22, 23 (1962). The plaintiff was neither a celebrity nor a public figure; she was a private person. Id. at 495, 353 S.W.2d at 22. Nor did she seek compensation for the economic value of her photograph as used by the defendant; rather, she sought damages for emotional injury. Id. at 496, 353 S.W.2d at 23. Olan Mills was simply a classic privacy claim seeking damages for mental anguish as a result of the defendant’s misappropriation of her likeness.

638. E.g., CAL. CIV. CODE § 3344.1 (West Supp. 2013).

639. Alicia M. Hunt, Comment, Everyone Wants to Be a Star: Extensive Publicity Rights for Noncelebrities Unduly Restrict Commercial Speech, 95 NW. U. L. REV. 1605, 1606–07 (2001) (describing different interests protected by the two torts).

640. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF UNFAIR COMPETITION § 46 (1995).

641. See, e.g., Doe v. TCI Cablevision, 110 S.W.3d 363, 369 (Mo. 2003).

642. ELDER, supra note 51, § 1:3.

643. See, e.g., Schuyler v. Curtis, 42 N.E. 22, 25 (N.Y. 1895). “Whatever right of privacy Mrs. Schuyler had died with her. Death deprives us all of rights, in the legal sense of that term; and, when Mrs. Schuyler died, her own individual right of privacy, whatever it may have been, expired at the same time.” Id.; see also Clift v. Narrangansett Television LP, 688 A.2d 805, 814 (R.I. 1996) (“[T]he right to privacy dies with the person.”); RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652I (1977).

644. RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652I cmt. b.

645. E.g., Memphis Dev. Found. v. Factors Etc., Inc., 616 F.2d 956 (6th Cir. 1980) (likeness of Elvis Presley); Shaw Family Archives Ltd. v. CMG Worldwide, Inc., 486 F. Supp. 2d 309 (S.D.N.Y. 2007) (name, image, and voice of Marilyn Monroe).

646. See, e.g., Robert C. O’Brien & Bela G. Lugosi, Update to the Commercial Value of Rights of Publicity: A Picture is Worth a Thousand Words . . . or Sometimes a Million Dollars, 27 ENT. & SPORTS LAW. (No. 3, Fall 2009); see also Erin K. Mai, Comment, “‘Cause This is Thriller!’: The True Price of Fame and an Analysis of the Current System for Calculating Estate Taxes on the Post-Mortem Right of Publicity”, 3 EST. PLANNING & COMMUNITY PROP. L.J. 1, 1 (2010).

647. E.g., CAL. CIV. CODE § 3344.1 (West Supp. 2013); NEB. REV. STAT. ANN. § 20-208 (LexisNexis 2008); OKLA. STAT. tit. 12, § 1448 (2010); TEX. PROP. CODE ANN. § 26.002 (West 2000); cf. KY. REV. STAT. ANN. § 391.170 (LexisNexis 2010) (although traditional right of privacy terminates upon death, the right of publicity, which protects one’s personality from commercial exploitation, survives).

648. Compare, e.g., CAL. CIV. CODE § 3344(g) (West 1997) (70 years) with 42 PA. CONS. STAT. ANN. § 8316(c) (West 2007) (30 years).

649. 2012 Ark. 369, ___ S.W.3d ___.

650. ARK. CODE ANN. § 16-62-101(a)(1) (Repl. 2005). Based on the plain language of the statute, the only exceptions are claims for slander and libel. See id. § 16-62-101(a)(2). Nevertheless, the Arkansas Supreme Court has interpreted “personal injury” claims strictly to preclude survival of personal injury claims not involving physical injury.

651. Cannady, 2012 Ark. at 8, ___ S.W.2d at ____.

652. Id., ___ S.W.2d at ___ (distinguishing Reid v. Pierce Cnty., 961 P.2d 333 (Wash. 1998)); see RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652I (1977).

653. Cannady, 2012 Ark. at 8, ___ S.W.2d at ___.

654. 284 Ark. 5, 6, 678 S.W.2d 361, 363–64 (1984).

655. Id. at 10, 678 S.W.2d at 364 (citing ARK. STAT. ANN. § 37-201 (Supp. 1983) (current version ARK. CODE ANN. § 16-56-104(4) (Repl. 2005)). Read in context, this specific language suggests that the General Assembly sought to apply a one-year statute of limitations to slander per quod, which requires proof of special damages. A separate subsection 16-56-104(3) applies a one-year statute of limitations to “words spoken slandering the character of another,” id., known at common law as slander per se, see United Ins. Co. of Am. v. Murphy, 331 Ark. 364, 368–69, 961 S.W.2d 752, 755 (1998). The Arkansas Supreme Court abolished the distinction between defamation per se and defamation per quod in 1998, holding that reputational injury or “special damages” must be shown to recover an award of damages in any action for defamation. Id. at 370, 961 S.W.2d at 756.

656. Dunlap, 284 Ark. at 9–10, 678 S.W.2d at 364.

657. Id. at 10, 678 S.W.2d at 364.

658. ELDER, supra note 51, § 1:2.

659. See, e.g., Dawson v. Assocs. Financial Servs. Co. of Kan., Inc., 529 P.2d 104, 111 (Kan. 1974) (finding that debt collection phone calls may amount to intrusion on seclusion and intentional infliction of emotional distress); see also RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652B cmt. d (1977) (“[W]hen the telephone calls are repeated with such persistence and frequency as to amount to a course of hounding the plaintiff, . . . his privacy is invaded.”).

660. See Time, Inc. v. Hill, 385 U.S. 374, 387–88 (1967) (applying to false light privacy claim the standard announced in New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254 (1976), for defamation claims by public figures).

661. See New York Times Co., 376 U.S. at 283.

662. See RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652E Caveat; ELDER, supra note 51, § 4:13.

663. See, e.g., West v. Media Gen. Convergence, Inc., 53 S.W.3d 640, 647–48 (Tenn. 2001) (adopting simple negligence standard for private plaintiff/private matter false light claims in light of United States Supreme Court’s “uncertain position . . . with respect to the constitutional standard for false light claims brought by private individuals about matters of private interest”); ELDER, supra note 51, § 4:13, at 4-155 (“In private person-non-public interest cases the law is undeveloped.”).

664. ELDER, supra note 51, § 4:13, at 4-156; see Dun & Bradstreet, Inc. v. Greenmoss Builders, Inc., 472 U.S. 749, 759 (1985) (holding Gertz restrictions generally inapplicable to private plaintiffs alleging defamation not involving a matter of public interest).

665. See Peoples Bank & Trust Co. of Mountain Home v. Globe Int’l Publ’g, Inc., 978 F.2d 1065, 1067–68 & n.2 (reasoning that proof of actual malice by clear and convincing evidence was required by Arkansas law).

666. Walmart Stores, Inc. v. Lee, 348 Ark. 707, 740, 74 S.W.3d 634, 657 (2002). “[T]he effect of the Gertz decision upon the Court’s holding in Time, Inc. v. Hill has been left in a state of uncertainty. For this reason, the American Law Institute added a caveat to section 652E leaving open the question of whether there may be liability based upon a showing of negligence as to truth or falsity.” Lee, 348 Ark. at 740, 74 S.W.3d at 657 (citations omitted).

667. E.g., Cannady v. St. Vincent Infirmary Med. Ctr., 2012 Ark. 369, at 9–10, ___ S.W.3d ___, ___; McCambridge v. City of Little Rock, 298 Ark. 219, 230, 766 S.W.2d 909, 914 (1989); Alexander v. Pathfinder, 189 F.3d 735, 742–43 (8th Cir. 1999) (mother raised privacy interests of her disabled son when her conversations with him in his room were audiotaped); see also Nat’l Archives & Records Admin. v. Favish, 541 U.S. 157, 167–69 (2004) (observing that family of Vince Foster had legitimate interest in protecting photographs of suicide victim from public disclosure). But see Boyd v. Thomson Newspaper Publ’g Co., 6

Media L. Rep. 1020, 1022 (W.D. Ark. 1980) (rejecting privacy interests asserted by parents for newspaper's unauthorized publication of name of their deceased child).

668. 298 Ark. 219, 766 S.W.2d 909.

669. Id. at 230–32, 766 S.W.2d at 914–15.

670. Favish, 541 U.S. at 171 (“[P]ersonal privacy protected by [FOIA] Exemption 7(C) extends to family members who object to the disclosure of graphic details surrounding their relative's death. . .”).

671. Id. at 169 (citing, e.g., McCambridge, 298 Ark. at 231–32, 766 S.W.2d at 915).

672. Id. at 170 (citations omitted).

673. E.g., Ark. Dep't of Human Servs. v. Cole, 2011 Ark. 145, at 15, 380 S.W.3d 429, 437 (acknowledging right of sexual cohabiters to engage in private, consensual, noncommercial acts of sexual intimacy in the privacy of their homes without prohibiting them from parenting by adoption or foster care); Jegley v. Picado, 349 Ark. 600, 632, 80 S.W.3d 332, 350 (2002) (recognizing “fundamental right to privacy implicit in [Arkansas] law protect[ing] all private, consensual, noncommercial acts of sexual intimacy between adults”).

674. Jegley, 349 Ark. at 632, 80 S.W.3d at 350.

675. Cole, 2011 Ark. at 21, 380 S.W.3d at 440.

676. Paschal v. State, 2012 Ark. 127, at 15, 388 S.W.3d 429, 438.

677. Cannady v. St. Vincent Infirmary Med. Ctr., 2012 Ark. 369, at 10, ___ S.W.3d ___, ___. However, the court reinstated the mother's claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress. Id. at 10–11, ___ S.W.3d at ___.

678. See, e.g., Catsouras v. Dep't of Cal. Hwy. Patrol, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 352 (Cal. Ct. App. 4th Dist. 2010); Sellers v. Henry, 329 S.W.2d 214 (Ky. 1959); Reid v. Pierce Cnty., 961 P.2d 333 (Wash. 1998).

679. Jegley v. Picado, 349 Ark. at 632, 80 S.W.3d at 350.

680. Polston v. State, 360 Ark. 317, 201 S.W.3d 406 (2005).

681. Id. at 332, 201 S.W.2d at 414 (dicta).

682. Dep't of Human Servs. & Child Welfare Agency Review Bd. v. Howard, 367 Ark. 55, 238 S.W.3d 1 (2006).

683. Id. at 65, 238 S.W.3d at 8.

684. Id. at 70, 238 S.W.3d at 11 (Brown, J., concurring).

685. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs. v. Cole, 2011 Ark. 145, at 26, 380 S.W.3d 429, 443.

686. Id. at 18–19, 380 S.W.3d at 439.

687. Id. at 24–25, 380 S.W.3d at 442.

688. 2012 Ark. 127, 388 S.W.3d 429.

689. Id. at 3, 388 S.W.3d at 432.

690. Id. at 11–12, 388 S.W.3d at 436.

691. Id. at 19, 388 S.W.3d at 440 (emphasis added) (Brown, J., joined by Gunter & Baker, JJ., dissenting in part and concurring in part).

692. Id. at 22–23, 388 S.W.3d at 441–42.

693. As the Eighth Circuit has observed, “[o]bscure” might best describe the [constitutional] right of privacy.” Sylvester v. Fogley, 465 F.3d 851, 857 (8th Cir. 2006).

694. ARK. CODE ANN. § 16-118-107 (Supp. 2011).

695. Id. § 16-118-107(a)(1); see LasikPlus Murphy, M.D., P.A. v. LCA-Vision, Inc., 776 F. Supp. 2d 886, 903 & n.7 (E.D. Ark. 2011) (holding that plaintiff stated facially plausible claim for civil recovery under ARK. CODE ANN. § 16-118-107 alleging violation of Arkansas criminal forgery statute).

696. ARK. CODE ANN. § 16-118-107(a)(2)–(3).

697. Id. §§ 5-28-101 to -110 (Repl. 2005 & Supp. 2011).

698. Id. §§ 5-55-101 to -114 (Repl. 2005 & Supp. 2011).

699. Id. § 16-118-107(a)(2)–(3).

700. See Koch v. Northport Health Servs. of Ark., LLC, 361 Ark. 192, 202, 205 S.W.3d 754, 762 (2005) (holding that jury was entitled to reach conflicting results in relation to ordinary negligence claim and statutory claim, which were distinct).

701. ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-16-102(c)(2) (Supp. 2011) (class D felony).

702. Id. § 5-16-101(a) (Supp. 2011).

703. Id. § 5-37-227(a) (Supp. 2011) (class C felony; class B felony if victim is elderly or disabled).

704. Id. § 5-71-229(a) (Supp. 2011) (class B felony for first degree; class C felony for second degree).

705. Id. § 5-39-201(a)(1) (Repl. 2006) (class B felony).

706. Id. § 5-39-201(b)(1) (class C felony).

707. ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-37-201 (Supp. 2011) (class B or C felony).

708. Id. § 5-37-208 (Repl. 2006) (class D felony for first degree).

709. Id. § 5-41-103(a) (Repl. 2006) (class D felony).

710. Id. § 5-41-104(a) (Repl. 2006) (class D felony if violation causes loss or damage of $2,500 or more).

711. Id. § 5-41-205(a) (Repl. 2006) (class D felony).

712. Id. § 5-41-206(a) (Repl. 2006) (class D felony if committed to devise or execute scheme to defraud or illegally obtain property).

713. ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-41-106(a) (Repl. 2006) (any computer-related crime in subchapter 1 of Chapter 41).

714. See ARKANSAS MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS CIVIL 601, 901 (Ark. Supreme Court Comm. on Jury Instructions 2013).

715. Cannady v. St. Vincent Infirmary Med. Ctr., 2012 Ark. 369, at 2, ___ S.W.3d ___.

716. Id., ___ S.W.3d at ___.

717. Id. at 8, ___ S.W.3d at ___.

718. Cf. RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF TORTS: PHYSICAL AND EMOTIONAL HARM § 38 (2012) (“When a statute requires an actor to act for the protection of another, the court may rely on the statute to decide that an affirmative duty exists and to determine the scope of the duty.”).

Both federal and state courts may rely on federal statutes or regulations to recognize an affirmative duty in tort law. When they do so, they are determining state law, as there is no general federal common law. The use of a federal enactment to find a state-law affirmative duty is permissible so long as the federal provision does not preempt state tort-law liability. The use of federal legislation as the basis for finding an affirmative duty is, in this respect, analogous to a court determining that violation of a federal provision constitutes negligence per se in a tort case governed by state law.

Id. cmt. b.

719. See, e.g., Koch v. Northport Health Servs. of Ark., LLC, 361 Ark. 192, 207–08, 205 S.W.3d 754, 766 (2005) (dicta) (holding violations of federal nursing home regulations provided evidence of negligence, even if the regulations did not specifically govern the case (citing Dunn v. Brimer, 259 Ark. 855, 537 S.W.2d 164 (1976))); Franco v. Bunyard, 261 Ark. 144, 147, 547 S.W.2d 91, 93 (1977) (holding violation of federal gun control laws was sufficient evidence of negligence to preclude summary judgment).

720. A federal trial court has recently suggested rather cryptically that an alleged violation of a federal criminal statute does not apply to the Arkansas crime victims civil liability statute. See LasikPlus Murphy, M.D., P.A. v. LCA-Vision, Inc., 776 F. Supp. 2d 886, 903 & n.7 (E.D. Ark. 2011).

721. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF TORTS: PHYSICAL AND EMOTIONAL HARM § 38.

722. Ark. Dep’t of Human Servs. v. Cole, 2011 Ark. 145, at 26, 380 S.W.3d 429, 443.